ADDENDA.

No. 66.—I have lately been shown a photograph of this inscription by Mr. G. Sanderson, Superintendent of British and Muhammadan Monuments, Northern Circle. The inscription as given in the text is wrong (it was reproduced from Führer.) It reads and the rest as in the text, save that after the date 1816, should be read

مرقد کپتان طامس رس صاحب

تمیچر نعست و پنج سال

The name therefore is Thomas Ross, not Smith.

INTRODUCTION.

The present list is an attempt to revise and enlarge the former list of Christian Tombs and Monuments, published by Dr. Führer in 1895. The revision consists in a simpler arrangement, in the verification of all epitaphs by district officers or myself, in the compilation of a bibliography, and the addition of historical and biographical notes. The enlargement is considerable ; there are now 989 entries as against 599. Part of this increase is due to rearrangement, but chiefly it is due to fresh entries.

Before 1895, the only attempt to deal with the epitaphs of the U. P. was the " Bengal Obituary," published in 1848. It contained but the merest selection of tombs from this province ; but the book is now rare, and I have thought it would prove of interest to distinguish the inscriptions in this list which also appeared in the old obituary. This is done by the letters " B. O." after the inscription.

I have kept in the list the inscriptions of a certain number of monuments which cannot now be traced, but were in the two former lists. It is possible that they may some day be of interest, even of use, to some pious descendant desirous of keeping green the memory of an ancestor by a new tablet in church or cemetery.

The period covered is 1611 to 1908. The epitaphs refer to many events of great importance, from the old English and Dutch factories and the Jesuit Mission at Agra, down to the Naini Tal landslip of 1880 and the Manipur rebellion. Of the whole posse of Anglo-Indian worthies, forgotten, half forgotten and unforgettable, the Province can claim its full share,—from John Mildenhall, the self-styled " ambassador " of Elizabeth, whose tomb is said by competent authority to be probably the oldest English tomb in India, down to Quinton and Capper and Sir John Strachey. A complete list of the great men who died in the U. P. would commence with an English Marquess who fought in three continents and ruled in two : it would end, perhaps, with a gallant French circus-master who went out to fight with Anglo-Indian Volunteers at Agra "pour l'honneur de l'alliance." Soldier, statesman, civilian, doctor, missionary, factor, man of learning, heroes of Lake's wars, of Gurkha and Pindari and Afghan and Sikh and Central Indian and Mutiny campaigns, Viceroys and Lieutenant Governors and Political Agents and Judges and Collectors,—such is the medley of famous men which this list commemorates.

Rudyard Kipling in one of his famous stories has laid stress on the way in which certain families have served, and are still serving, India from father to son. Of this fact this list affords ample proof. It would be interesting to calculate how many of the persons buried in this province were born as well as died in India; the figure would be high indeed. The families of LaTouche and Thornhill are two conspicuous instances. There are no less than five of the former race buried in this province alone; no less than seven of the latter family were serving in this province at one and the same time. Cherry, Hogg, Currie, Muir, Boileau, Lawrence, Strachey, Lushington, Havelock, Lindsay, Hope—all these families can boast a similar succession of Anglo-Indian officers.

No list of epitaphs can be without its instances of unconscious humour. I found an epitaph to a man who died "craving a large widow and family to mourn his loss"; an exquisite instance of a "nice derangement of epitaphs". There are many curious verses such as the somewhat prosaic lines beginning—

"Good attendance was applied,

Physicians were in vain;"

and, above all, the little poem entitled "To-day and to-morrow."

Nor is the list without its puzzles. How came a Major "of the Brazilian service" to be buried in Chunar? Who was Elizabeth R——, "of His Majesty's—th Foot?" Was she one of those Amazons of whom one occasionally reads, who joined a regiment in male attire and fought with it for years? The Indian sculptor, "Ramjohn Mistry" of the Chunar inscription and his kind, is responsible for many curiosities. His weird genius turns "Catheart" into "Cat. H. Cart", "R. E. Parry" into "Reparry", "Cha. Wil. Burton" into "Chawil Barton." In Führer's list was to be found an exact replica of the inscription on the monument to the officers killed at Bhitaura in 1794, which was described as in a Chunar cemetery. The explanation is this. Many of these funeral monuments were of Chunar stone. The duplicate at Chunar was on a flawed stone, which had been rejected, and left lying about at Chunar. A collector, vir pius, found it and put it up in the cemetery, to cause (as I myself know) much searching of heart and history to various gentlemen who wondered how on earth we came to be embroiled with the Rohillas so far east as Mirzapur!

A few words about some of the less well-known authorities in the bibliography may be of value:—

- (1) The calendar and directory of the Agra archdiocese (No. 15) is much more than its name implies. It contains very valuable notes on many old tombs at Agra compiled from the old mission archives by Father Felix, O. C.
- (2) Dyces Sombre versus Solaroli, &c. (No. 16), is a book containing the depositions in the famous will suit of 1852 (vide note on Dyce Sombre).

- (3) The sketch of the rise and progress of the Benares Pat-shalla (No. 36) is a history, existing in manuscript in the Benares College Library, of Jonathan Duncan's Sanskrit College from the foundation up to 1848, written by a Professor at the College, and printed in 1907.
- (4) Dodwell and Miles' Lists (No. 117-9), and Prinsep's General register" (No. 120) are similar to the present "History of services of Gazetted officers", but much less complete. For soldiers and medical men, the dates of commissions and death or retirement are given: for Civilians, the various posts held.
- (5) The E. I. register (No. 121) is the forerunner of the present Civil Lists and India Army Lists, combined in one volume. But it also contains (up to 1835 or so) lists of non-official residents, with births, marriages and deaths.
- (6) The Services Bengal Army List (No. 125) is a series of manuscript volumes containing details about many officers, obviously extracts from letters written home to the Court of Directors. There is much curious information in this book; for instance I found one field officer who was tried by court martial on 23 charges, one of which was swearing at the standing orders! He was reprimanded.
- (7) The Writer's Petitions, Cadet's Papers, and Assistant Surgeon's Petitions (Nos. 126-9) are the original papers referring to the nominations of the civil, military and medical officers of the Company. They begin with little more than a birth certificate; later, they contain also information of all kinds, notably about the father's profession, and the schools at which the officer concerned was educated.

One other point I may be permitted to mention. It may be noticed that I have been silent on the controversies which have raged and are still raging round the names of certain great men. My reason is simply that if pigmies must squabble about a dead giant, they should at least have the decency not to do so over the giant's tomb. And further cui bono? we may surely say of their memories, as of their souls, "Requiescat in pace."

My thanks are due to the gentlemen mentioned at the end of the bibliography for the courtesy with which they have always answered my requests for information. I am also indebted to Mr. R. Burn, C. S., for many useful hints which led me to sources of information; to Mr. A. G. Ellis of the India Office for assistance with the Armenian inscriptions; and to Miss Milford for the excellent photograph of John Mildenhall's tomb which is reproduced as a frontispiece. Other civilians who took much trouble in collecting inscriptions for me are Messrs. J. V. S. Wilkinson, J. C. Moore and H. G. Smith. But most of all am I indebted to four gentlemen—Mr. W. Irvine for the loan of various authorities otherwise inaccessible; Captain E. Milford, who collected for me all the information given about the Indian and other services of British Regiments; the Reverend Father H. Hosten, S. J., who not only furnished me with a mass of material and hints on that difficult subject, the Jesuits in Agra, but was good enough to look through and criticize my account of them; it is to be hoped that he will some day take this subject in hand and deal with it as it deserves; and lastly Mr. W. Foster of the India Office, not only for many valuable suggestions and the readiness with which he put both private and official sources of information at my disposal, but for the sympathy with which he viewed my attempt to deal adequately with the deeds of "famous men, and our fathers who begat us."

C.'s 2nd European Regiment, who after some months of painful suffering departed this life on the 13th of June in the year of the Lord 1828, aged 40. His virtuous and amiable disposition rendered him generally beloved in life and lamented in death. This memorial is erected by his afflicted widow as the last earthly tribute of affection and respect to an indulgent and affectionate husband.

[Appointed cadet 1803, lieutenant 1804, captain 1818. He was born at Dinapore in 1788 and served in Java.]

- 3.—1834—BLUNDELL, W., Major. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Major William Blundell, XI Dragoons, who was killed by falling with his horse on the south side of the Landour Hill, on the 12th November 1834, aged 54 years.

"It is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners."—In Him alone is our hope of salvation for this our dear brother, whose kind and affectionate heart endeared him as a son and as a brother, and whose departure hence is severely felt, and deeply mourned by his family and by many friends. (B. O.)

[".... A house called Newlands, which has been struck and burnt three times by fire. The hill is said to contain a quantity of iron which attracts the electric fluid.... A short time ago as Major Blundell was going to that very house, Newlands, by some accident, his gunth (hill-pony) fell over the precipice, and they were both dashed to pieces." This tomb is not now traceable and is reproduced from Führer's List. In the B. O. it reads "falling with his Ghoont." The 11th Dragoons are the present 11th (Prince Albert's Own) Hussars, who were in India from 1819 to 1838.]

Those who in agony, but in humility deplore her loss deem not her death premature, for through the mercies of that Saviour in whom she trusted she was already meet for immortality; her rare personal and mental endowments were but the blossoms of the tree whose fruits were Christian purity and holiness. May those who now mourn her on earth be made partakers with her in the resurrection of the Blessed! (B. O.)

[This tomb is stated by B. O. to be at Meerut. Mrs. Raikes was the daughter of Colonel Matthews, and the first wife of Charles Raikes, B.C.S., C.S.I., Commissioner of Lahore; he was at Agra during the Mutiny and wrote "Notes on the Revolt in the North-Western Provinces." Her daughter Sophia married George Christian, B.C.S., Commissioner of Sitapur, where both she and her husband were murdered. The family is that of Raikes of Treberfydd, cf. No. 416.]

5. —1841—MADDOCK, T., Colonel. Inscription :—Erected by the Officers of the 10th Regiment N. I. to the memory of their esteemed and much valued friend and Commandant, the late Lieutenant-Colonel T. Maddock, who departed this life on the 14th day of October 1841, at. 58. During a command of 12 years, his undeviating kindness and the warm interest ever displayed towards all under him, secured to Colonel Maddock the love and respect of his Regiment by the officers and men of which his worth was justly appreciated and his death keenly deplored. Requiescat in pace!

[Colonel Maddock was appointed cadet in 1803, lieutenant 1804, captain 1819, major 1828 and Lieutenant-Colonel 1833. He was the son of E. Maddock, born 1788 and served mostly in the Military Secretary's department.]

- 6.—1847—EVANS, M., Mrs. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Mary Evans, the affectionate wife of Major F. R. Evans, Commanding Sirmoor Battalion, aged 26 years, 1 month and 16 days, beloved and respected by all who knew her. Dehra Dun, February 22nd, 1847.

While sorrow weeps o'er virtue's sacred dust,
Our tears become us, and our grief is just.
Such were the tears he shed, who grateful pays
This last sad tribute of his love and praise;
Who mourns the best of wives and friends combined,
Where female sweetness met the accomplished mind:
Mourns, but not murmurs, sighs but not despairs,
Feels as a man, but as a Christian bears. (B. O.)

[Mary, daughter of William Eccles, of Eccles Street, Dublin, married Francis Robert Evans, eldest son of Major-General R. Evans, R. A., of a Limerick family. The family seat is now Carker House, Co. Cork. The Sirmoor Battalion is the present 2nd King Edward's Own Gurkha Rifles (the Sirmoor Rifles).]

- 7.—1828—FARRINGTON, C. H., Sir, Bart. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Charles Henry Farrington, Bart., late Captain, His Majesty's 31st Regiment, who departed this life 26th day of March 1828 in the 35th year of his age.

[This tomb is near the 3rd mile-stone and the Jharipani Bazar. It has lately been reported destroyed by a slip.]

Sir Charles Henry Farrington, 2nd Baronet, was born in 1794. He was the son of Capt. C. O. Farrington and grandson of Sir Anthony Farrington, 1st Baronet, a General of Artillery. Sir Charles served in the Peninsular War, at Talavera, and later at Waterloo. He came out to India in the Xent East India-man and was wrecked. He was one of the first officers sent up to Landour with troops and was accompanied by a Captain Skinner [later Col. Thomas Skinner, C.B., of the 31st (East Surreys) and author of "Excursions in India"] who mentions the fact. The family is connected with the family of Evans (H. F. Evans and L. G. Evans, both members of the C. S. in these provinces); a daughter of Sir H. M. Farrington, 3rd Baronet (uncle of Sir C. H. Farrington) married the Rev. G. H. Evans. The present (6th) baronet Sir H. A. Farrington is in the Forest Department in Bengal.]

KALANGA MONUMENTS, NEAR MEERUT-RURKI- LANDOUR ROAD.

8.—1814—OFFICERS AND MEN KILLED AT KALANGA.

Inscription:—

On the west side.—To the memory of Major-General Sir Robt. Rollo Gillespie, K.C.B., Lieutenant O'Hara, 6th N. I., Lieutenant Gosling, Lt. Battalion, Ensign Fothergill, 17th N. I., Ensign Ellis, Pioneers, killed on the 31st October 1814; Captain Campbell, 6th N. I., Lieutenant Luxford, Horse Arty., Lieutenant Harrington, His Majesty's 53rd Regiment, Lieutenant Cummingsam (sic), 13th N. I., killed on the 27th November, and of the Non-Commissioned Officers and men who fell at the assaults.

On the east side.—Troops engaged: detachments Horse and Foot Arty., 100 men of the 8th Royal Irish Lt. Dragoons, who were dismtd. and led to the assault by Sir R. R. Gillespie, His Majesty's 53rd Regiment; 5 Light Companies from Corps in Meerut; 1st Battalion, 6th N. I.; 1st Battalion, 7th N. I.; 1st Battalion, 13th N. I.; 1st Battalion, 17th N. I.; 7th Native Cavalry; 1 Risalah of Skinner's Horse.

9.—1814—GURKHAS KILLED AT KALANGA. Inscription:—

On the west side.—On the highest point of the hill above this tomb stood the fort of Kalanga. After two assaults on the 31st October and 27th November, it was captured by the British troops on the 30th of November 1814 and completely razed to the ground.

On the east side.—This is inscribed as a tribute of respect for our gallant adversary Bulbudder, Commander of the Fort, and his brave Goorkhas, who were afterwards, while in the service of Ranjit Singh, shot down in their ranks to the last man by the Afghan Artillery.

[The exact position is on a low hill $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.-E. of Dehra, opposite the 6th furlong of mile 110 on the road mentioned in the title, and half a mile distant on the right hand side of the road.]

Kalanga is also called Nalapani. In 1814 Lord Hastings declared war on Nepal and invaded it with 4 columns, of which one, under General Gillespie, was to penetrate the Siwaliks and occupy the Dun. The Kalanga fort was held in force. Contrary to direct orders against rash attacks on strong places, Gillespie decided to storm it. He arranged a signal for the attack: but gave it an hour too soon, and only two out of four columns obeyed it. Ensign Ellis led his Pioneers up to the wall but was killed almost immediately, and the columns were repulsed. Gillespie seeing this led a second assault himself but was not too readily followed except by about 100 men of the 8th Dragoons, which he had once commanded. He was shot close under the wall, and his A. D. C., Lieut. O'Hara, was also killed by his side. Col. Mawbey waited for a siege train, and when it arrived bombarded the place for two days. On the 27th November another assault was made. The troops hung back: Lieut. Harrington of the 53rd mounted the breach alone, to show how easily it could be ascended: but being unsupported "fell a victim to his gallantry and zeal." Lieut. Luxford then took up a light gun as close as he could to fire it into the breach; he too was killed in so doing. The men would not attack again and the retreat was sounded. Nine officers and 62 men were killed, 20 officers and 649 men were wounded in the two assaults. The place was then regularly shelled and evacuated on the 30th. It was a disastrous affair, wasting many lives, and what was almost as important, two cold weather months. Balbhaddar Singh was nephew of General Amr Singh, regent for Raja Bir Bikram Sah. He had only 200 men to defend Kalunga with.

The 8th R. I. L. D., are now the 8th (King's Royal Irish) Hussars. Their Indian honours are Laswaree, Hindostan, Central India and Afghanistan 1879-80. They also fought in the Crimea and Boer war; we shall find them again at Kalinjar. The 53rd are now the 1st Battalion, the King's (Shropshire Light Infantry). They were raised in 1755 and were in India from 1805 to 1823, 1844 to 1860, and 1894 to 1903. Their Indian honours are Aliwal, Sobraon, Punjab, Gujarat and Lucknow. They have also fought at Nicuport and Tournay, in the West Indies, Egypt and the Sudan; and a 2nd battalion, in existence from 1803 to 1817, fought through the Peninsular war.

The "1 Risalah of Skinner's Horse" is now represented by the 1st Duke of York's Own Lancers (Skinner's Horse), for the 2nd Risalah of Skinner's Horse (now 3rd Lancers), was not raised till December of this year. This famous regiment was raised by Colonel J. Skinner from a body of Perron's Horse, who came over after Lake's victory at Delhi; their honours are Bhurtpore, Candahar 1842, Afghanistan 1879-80 and Pekin 1900. It is to be noted that "Risalah" at this time meant not a regiment but a body of 114 rank and file, exclusive of English officers. There were up to 1814-15 eight "Risalahs" of Skinner's Horse; it was then increased to three regiments of 1,304 rank and file each, including gallopers guns. The 3rd Lancers was the 2nd of those corps.

For Gillespie vide No. 10. Brabazon R. O'Hara joined the service in 1805, Francois Pothergill in 1812, J. Campbell in 1807, J. Cunningham in 1804, R. H. Gosling in 1810 (he belonged to the 27th N. I.), and R. Ellis in 1807 (he belonged to the 2nd N. I.). For Luxford, cf. No. 11.]

- 10.—1814—GILLESPIE, R. R., Sir. Inscription:—Vellore—Cornellis—Palimbang. Sir R. R. Gillespie, K. C. B., Djoejoarta, 31st October 1814. Kalanga.

Repaired in 1862 by his old corps, the 8th King's Royal Irish Hussars.

[This monument is a large column 50 feet high on a square masonry base. The first three words are on a scroll, the rest on a funeral urn, both in bas relief on the same slab. Though the prefix of three of Gillespie's famous battles and the affix of his last are intelligible, the interposition of "Djoejoarta"—an affair in the Java expedition—is curious.

Robert Rollo Gillespie (1766—1814), joined the 3rd Irish Horse in 1783. He fought first in the W. Indies, notably at Saint Domingo (1792-6). He came to India in 1804. When at Arcot, in 1806, he rescued the survivors of the 69th Foot from the mutineers at Vellore with a regiment of Dragoons, a squadron of native cavalry and some gallopers guns. He commanded the cavalry in the expedition against Ranjit Singh in 1809, the Mysore division, and the advance of Sir S. Auchmuty's expedition to Java (1807—13). He fought at Cornellis and Djoejoarta. He left Java in 1812 and went as Major-General to Meerut. He was made K. C. B. on the 1st January 1815, after his death. There is a monument to him in St. Paul's Cathedral. Cf. No. 8 for his death.]

Luxford of the Bengal Horse Artillery, who fell mortally wounded in the attack of Fort Kalanga on the 27th, and died on the 30th November 1814, aged 22 years. This cenotaph is erected by his brother officers in testimony of their affection and esteem.

[Cf. No. 8 above. The Luxford family is an old Sussex family, dating at least as far back as the Armada, against which two Luxfords, belonging to different branches, fought. John Bellamy Boyes Luxford was appointed cadet in 1807 and Lieutenant Fireworker in 1809. He was the son of John Luxford, born at Ewell in 1791.]

- 12.—1816—LUMSDEN, Major. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Major Lumsden, late Deputy Commissary-General to the Bengal Forces, who died 30th September 1816, in the 32nd year of his age. This monument is erected by his afflicted widow, who though she mourned her early separation from one in every way calculated to inspire her with the most lasting affection, and thus to form the greatest earthly happiness, humbly hopes through the merits of that "Great Redeemer" in whom he trusted, to meet again in the realms of peace and joy.

Where God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and where shall be no more deaths, neither sorrow nor crying.

Rev. XXI—4.

[The monument is a large brick masonry cenotaph with a stone altar inside. The inscription is on a marble slab fixed in the masonry floor in front of the altar. This is probably James Lumsden, appointed cadet in 1800, cornet in 1802 and lieutenant in 1805. He is recorded by Dodwell and Miles as dying at Meerut on the 14th September 1816: but there is no other Lumsden to whom the inscription could possibly be referred, and Dodwell and Miles' dates of death are frequently inaccurate, as were indeed their authorities—the "Services Army List," and presumably the letters on which these were founded. James Lumsden was the son of William Lumsden, writer to the signet, born at Edinburgh in 1785.]

- 14.—1821—HARDYMAN, B., Major-General. Inscription:—In this spot are deposited the remains of Major-General B. Hardyman, C.B., late in command of the 2nd Division in Lord Lake's Field Force (late of 17th Foot), 1816.

He departed this life on 28th November 1821, in the 55th year of his age; greatly and deservedly regretted by all who knew him, but by none more than the Officers of His Majesty's 17th Foot, who raised this monument as a small but sincere token of the high esteem and regard in which his memory is held by a Corps, which he so long and so happily commanded.

[A large cenotaph of masonry with a marble tablet. Major-General Hardyman commanded a force in the Pindari War and also fought in the Nepalese War and at Kamona. The 17th Foot are now the Leicestershire Regiment, in India 1804-23. The initial B. is wrong: the name was Frederick.]

16.—1825—OCHTERLONY, D., Sir. Inscription:—Major-General Sir David Ochterlony, Baronet, G.C.B., born February 12th, 1758, died July 14th, 1825.

[The tomb is a large cenotaph of ornamental brickwork: the inscription is on a marble slab on the north side. Sir David Ochterlony, Bart., G.C.B. (1758—1825), son of David Ochterlony, was born at Boston, New England. He joined the H. E. I. C's Bengal Army in 1777, served under Sir E. Coote (1781-3), and was taken prisoner at Cuddalore (1783) and released in 1784. He fought under Lake in 1803 in the Doab. After the battle of Delhi he was appointed resident at the Emperor's court. He commanded at Allahabad in 1806, and on the Sutlej against Ranjit Singh in 1808. In 1814-15, he commanded one of the four columns sent against the Gurkhas—the westernmost which operated near the Sutlej and the only one successful. He took Fort Malagarh and defeated Amr Singh at Malaun (cf. No. 7 note). He was made a Baronet and K. C. B. for his services; in 1816 he took command of the main army operating against Khatmandu, defeated the Gurkhas at Magwampar and ended the war. He became a G. C. B. in 1816. In the Pindari-Mahratta War (1817-18) he commanded the reserve column at Rewari. His advance south of Jaipur forced the Pindari Amir Khan to accept a treaty without striking a blow and further clever strategy compelled the surrender of the Pathan forces. In 1818 he became Resident in Rajputana, which he pacified. In 1825 he prepared to support with arms Balwant Singh, the six-year old Raja of Bhartpur, against an usurper, on the ground that he, as Resident, by the presentation of a "Khilat" had pledged the Government to recognize the succession; but Lord Amherst refused to put this construction on his action, or to intervene; and his death is ascribed to chagrin at the insult to his honour. A column has been erected to him at Calcutta. He obtained a second patent in 1823 recreating him a baronet with remainder to Charles Maccalle Ochterlony, son of Roderick Peregrine Ochterlony. The present baronet is Sir David Ferguson Ochterlony, of Ochterlony, Forfarshire. The family formerly belonged to Pitforth, of which Sir David's grandfather was laird: but in the direct line, at all events, it is extinct.]

While darkness veiled the vaulted sky,
In solemn silent march they trod,
Eager to shout their battle cry,
And prompt to war for Britain and for God,
And when the earthquake signal shock,
Gave angry summons to advance,
And firm and stern as planted rock,
Each hero braved the hostile lance :
Remember, soldiers, nothing could uphold
The warrior spirit like the hope of Heaven ;
And would'st thou bear thyself with front as bold,
Believe in Him in whom thy sins forgiven,
He shall support them more awful seems, (sic).
When louder trumpets' clang shall rouse their ear,
When nature's universal wreck is seen,
And saints victorious shout, and sinners sink with fear.

This tablet here inscribed with the sanction of Major-General Sir Thomas Reynell, K.C.B., (in whose division and under whose immediate charge, His Majesty's 14th Regiment had the honour to do their duty) is placed as a mark of esteem and of faithful remembrance by their surviving comrades.

[Bharatpur was a virgin fortress which had repulsed Lake in 1805. At this time it had been seized by an usurper, who had imprisoned the boy heir. Sir D. Ochterlony assembled a force to assault it : and though Lord Amherst put off the evil day, a few months later it was found imperative to send a force against it. Lord Combermere commanded the army of 21,000 men. Lieutenant-Colonel Edwards was in charge of a brigade of three regiments. There was a good deal of desultory fighting at the end of December and there was an ineffective bombardment on the 24th December. Lord Combermere then decided to mine the walls of the town, Gokulgarh, which was nearest the citadel. By the 18th two breaches had been made and that day an assault by four columns was carried out. The garrison was driven back in spite of a gallant defence ; Brigadier Edwards (No. 18 below) was wounded severely, and died of his wounds.

The 14th Foot had two battalions. This was the 1st battalion, raised in 1685. It was in India from 1810 to 1831 and 1867 to 1879. Its Indian honours are "Java," "Bharatpur" and "India" (with Royal Tiger). It was formerly the 14th (Buckinghamshire, the Prince of Wales' Own) Regiment, and is now the Prince of Wales' Own (West Yorkshire) Regiment. It also fought at Tournay, Corunna, Waterloo and Sevastopol, as well as at the siege of Gibraltar, Falkirk, Culloden and Walcheren. Sir T. Reynell commanded the 1st Infantry Division ; Brigadier Edwards (No. 18) was Colonel of the 14th and commanded the 2nd Brigade, 2nd Division, under Sir Jasper Nicolls.]

Armstrong of the same corps, who in the successful assault of the fortress of Bharatpur on the morning of the 8th July 1826, fell on the ramparts in the gallant discharge of his duty, General Edwards leading the left column of attack. This tablet is erected as a tribute of the esteem in which he was held while living, and sorrow for his premature fate, by some of his brother officers, who intimately knew and deeply appreciated the many excellences of his head and heart. Alas!! Poor Maxwell!!! (B. O.)

[The 11th L. Dragoons are now the 11th (Prince Albert's Own) Hussars. They were in India from 1819 to 1838 and fought at Bharatpore.]

- 20.—1836—NEVILLE, W. F. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of W. F. Neville, Paymaster, H. M.'s 11th Regiment of Light Dragoons, who departed this life on 3rd February 1836. [He was appointed cadet in 1815. As an ensign he fought at the siege of Asirgarh and became lieutenant in the same year (1819). He was promoted captain in 1827. He was at Addiscombe 1812-4. He was mentioned in despatches at er Mundela, Hathras and Asirgarh; and was much in civil employ. He was Superintending Engineer in the North-Western Provinces in 1835, in the Central Provinces in 1837, and in charge of canals in the Western Provinces (whatever that name in the Services List precisely means) in 1839. - 22.—1839—(1) ARNOLD, R., Lieut.-Colonel. (2) HILTON, W., Captain. (3) JEWERARITY, D., Lieutenant. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Lieutenant-Colonel Robert Arnold, 16th Lancers, Brigadier, commanding the Bengal Cavalry of the Army of the 'Indus,' who died at Kabul, 20th August 1839; also of Captain William Hilton, drowned in crossing the river Jhelum on the 11th December 1839; and of Lieutenant David Jewerarity, barbarously murdered at Kandahar, 18th May 1839. This tablet is erected by the Regimental Officers and men as a record of their affection and esteem for their commanding officer, and respect for the memory of their deeply lamented comrades.

[Col. Arnold died at Kabul. He "had long remained in a hopeless state : . . I do not think he ever recovered the attack he had at Meerut." At Meerut, nearly a year before, Col. Arnold had burst a blood vessel in his lungs. At Waterloo he had been shot through the lungs and recovered. The 16th Lancers, now the 16th (the Queen's) Lancers, were raised in 1759 and in India from 1822 to 1846. They were at Bharatpore, Ghazni, Maharajpore, Aliwal, Sohraon, and Afghanistan—all of which honours they bear—and also fought in the Peninsular War at Waterloo and the last Boer war.]

- 23.—1845—(1) GWITT, B., Lieutenant.—1846—(2) BEALE, W. Y., Lieutenant. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Lt. Richard Brandram Gwitt of Her Majesty's 10th Regiment of Foot, who died at Meerut on the 3rd June 1845; also to the memory of Lieut. Walter Young Beale, Her Majesty's 10th Regiment of Foot, who fell in action gallantly leading on his company to the attack of the trenches at 'Sobraon' on the 10th February 1846. This tablet is erected by their brother officers as a token of the regard they felt for them and regret at their loss.

[Sobraon was a strongly intrenched position on the Sutlej. There were 67 guns in position and some 35,000 men in the trenches; but the latter were not all trained and the former not of uniform design. The action commenced with a tremendous cannonade. Sir R. Dick's leading brigade on the right carried the entrenchments; the second line was checked, but re-formed and again advanced. Gilbert's division was checked but also rallied, and Sir H. Smith's division was successful. Even the cavalry rode through an opening in the entrenchments and charged. The trenches were carried with the bayonet. The enemy broke and were cut to pieces on the bridge which gave way under them. The battle of Sobraon was decisive and ended the First Sikh War. The 10th Foot present at Sobraon was the present 1st Battalion, the Lincolnshire Regiment.]

- 24.—1846—SWETENHAM, H. D., Lieutenant. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Henry D. Swetenham, Esq., Lieutenant in Her Majesty's 16th Lancers, who fell at the battle of Aliwal, 28th January 1846, in the hour of victory, whilst charging the enemy's batteries, anno ætatis 27. This tablet is erected by his brother officers, as a token of esteem and affection.

[This battle was won by Sir Harry Smith against Ranjit Singh. They came into collision at Aliwal: the Sikh line inclined towards and extended beyond the British right, whilst the other flank was more distant. The Sikh line rested on Aliwal on the left, and this Sir Harry attacked with success: for his opponents at this point were not the trained army, but levies: they broke and left the Sikh gunners to be cut down. The cavalry made a successful charge and rolled up half the Sikh army. On the left, however, the trained Sikhs stood, until charged by the 16th Lancers, who rode thrice through them. It is not clear whether this young officer was killed in capturing the guns on the Sikhs' left, or in the charge on the infantry, or in capturing the guns subsequently. It may have been any of the three—most probably from the wording of the epitaph the third.]

- 27.—1857—(1) PHILLIPS, J., Vet-Surgeon. (2) DAWSON, C. J., Vet-Surgeon. (3) DAWSON, E., Mrs. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of John Phillips, Veterinary Surgeon, 3rd Bengal Cavalry, murdered during the Mutiny at Meerut on 10th May 1857. This tomb is erected by George Carmichael Smyth, Colonel of the Regiment, in token of affection and regard.

Oh! tell me, hope and faith,
Is there no resting-place,
From sorrow, sin and death:
Is there no happy spot,
Where mortals may be blest,
Where grief may find a balm,
And weariness a rest?
Faith, hope and love,
Best boons to mortals given,
Waved their bright wings,
And whispered, 'yes, in Heaven.'

This tablet was erected by Colonel G. Carmichael Smyth, 3rd Bengal Cavalry, to the memory of his friend Charles John Dawson, Veterinary Surgeon, Bengal Cavalry, and Eliza, his wife, both murdered at Meerut on 10th May 1857.

[The 3rd B. C. was the regiment whose men refused to take the cartridge at Meerut. Eighty of them were sentenced to 10 and five to 5 years' hard labour, and ironed on the parade-ground in front of their comrades—"inconceivable folly" in Lord Canning's words, which irritated troops already disaffected, and drove the regiment to attempt their comrades' rescue. In doing this, they also liberated the other prisoners and then, joined by the population of the bazar and city, fired many Europeans' bungalows and murdered every European they met, amongst them Mr. and Mrs. Dawson and Mr. Phillips. The latter was murdered on the road with a sword-cut on the head, and found by Lt. Farnell.]

[Captain MacDonald, son of Lieutenant MacDonald, R. N., was born in 1823. He was shot by his own men whilst trying to pacify them at their magazine.

Mrs. MacDonald was in her bungalow at the time of the outbreak. Dressed in native clothes, she went with three faithful servants, Nasiban, nurse, Bakhtawar chavkidar, and Sukha, dhobi, to a house of the second in the city: her three children were with them. They were met by a crowd who killed Mrs. MacDonald with swords. The three infants were saved by the servants.]

He was greatly beloved of his regiment, with whom he had served almost all his time.]

- 36.—1858—PENNY, N., Maj.-General. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Major-General N. Penny, C.B., Commanding the Meerut Division. Born at Weymouth, Dorsetshire, on the 12th March 1790; killed at the head of his column in a skirmish with the enemy, near the village of Kakirowlee in Rohilkund, on the morning of the 30th April 1858, after a service of 51 years. His precious remains were brought into Meerut through the kind exertions of Captain E. J. Simpson, Assistant Commissary-General.

Say yet to the righteous that it shall be well with him.

Thos. 3rd chapter, part of 10th verse.

Them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

Thos. 4th chapter, part of 11th verse.

[General Penny succeeded General Hewitt in the Meerut command in July 1857. In March 1858 he was engaged by Sir Colin Campbell's order in guarding the Ganges from Hardwar to Kadirgunj against the rebels on the far side. The distance was 500 miles, his force was 2,500 strong and there were 50,000 rebels. Even in that war of miraculous achievements this was beyond human power to effect: and shortly after he was sent in command of a movable column into Aligarh and Rohilkhand. In April he was ordered to meet Sir C. Campbell at Miranpur Katra and it was during his march thither from Patiali that the affair of Kakrula (Kakirowlee of the inscription) occurred. The best account of this is to be found in Cracroft Wilson's narrative published as the Moradabad Mutiny narrative. The column marched at 9 p.m. Even in an enemy's country nothing would induce General Penny to expose "his Europeans" to the sun. Wilson was with the advanced guard of Carabineers. The march was leisurely, and the infantry were left in the rear. At dawn the staff had joined the advanced guard when suddenly they came on some horsemen, who opened out, and four guns loaded with grape were fired at them. By a miracle no one was hit; the British Artillery unlimbered, but not till four rounds had been fired by the enemy. As soon as our guns opened a body of Ghazis charged, but they were cut up by the Carabineers. The enemy then retreated. It was now discovered that General Penny was missing. His corpee was found 800 yards beyond the spot where the Carabineers had charged the Ghazis. His left arm had been broken by a bullet, his reins had dropped and his pony had galloped to the front, into the midst of the rebels; then he fell off and was despatched by two sword-cuts. General Penny fell a victim to his care for his European soldiers. The story is told of him that at Patiali he threatened to prohibit altogether some sports that were got up for the soldiers if they were not on the ground at dawn. A stern disciplinarian he was none the less beloved by his men. "The good old General," as Wilson affectionately calls him, was buried under a mango tree: his body was subsequently removed and re-interred in Meerut.

Nicholas Penny (1790-1858) entered the Bengal N. I. in 1807. He was present at the siege of Bhartpur in 1825-6 and commanded a brigade at Aliwal, Sobraon (1st Sikh War) and at Chilianwala and Gujrat (2nd Sikh War). He commanded the Sirhind Division in 1852, the Cawnpore Division in 1855 and the Meerut Division in 1857; Major-General 1854. The first text is from Isaiah iii, 10: the second from 1 Thessalonians.]

PATPERGANJ, S.E. OF SHAHDARA.

- 40.—1803—OFFICERS KILLED AT THE BATTLE OF DELHI. Inscription:—To the memory of the undermentioned gallant officers:—Major Middleton, 3rd Regt., Native Cavalry; Capt. McGregor, Persian interpreter; Lieut. Hill, 2nd battalion, 12th Native Infantry; Lieut. Preston, 2nd battalion, 13th Native Infantry; Cornet Sanguine, 27th Dragoons; Quarter master Richardson, 27th Dragoons. The following extract from the order of the Govt. of India refers to the action in which they fell: "The Governor General in Council sincerely laments the loss of Major Middleton, Captain McGregor, Lieut. Hill, Lieut. Preston, Cornet Sanguine, Quarter master Richardson and of the brave soldiers who fell in the exemplary exertions of deliberated valour and discipline spirit at the battle of Delhi. The names of these brave men will be communicated with the glorious events of the day on which they fell, and will be honoured and revered while the fame of that signal victory shall endure." This monument was repaired and the tablet which had disappeared was replaced by order of the Lieut.-Govr. of N.-W. P., 1898. The battle was fought on the 11th September 1800.

[There are several errors in the above, especially in the extract quoted.

The whole order is given by Thorn. The errors are as follows :—

Lieutenant William Preston (joined service in 1798), belonged to the 2nd battalion, 15th N.I.

"Captain McGregor" should be "Captain McGregor."

"Exemplary . . . spirit" should read "Exemplary exertion of deliberate valour and disciplined spirit."

"Communicated" should be "commemorated."

The troops of the enemy at Delhi consisted of 18 battalions of Perron's regulars, mostly belonging to the 2nd and 3rd brigades. They were commanded by Louis Bourquien, Perron's bosom friend, who had treacherously deserted him, won over both brigades (he had formerly only commanded the 3rd) and forced the poor old Emperor, Shah Alam, to invest him with the supreme authority. Shah Alam "deputed more authority from a prison than many a sovereign has done from a throne," but his keeper, Captain Dragoon, stood by Perron and had to be forced to submission by Bourquien. Meantime, Perron had been defeated and surrendered to the British; and this gave colour to Bourquien's assertions that Perron was a traitor. The remnants that remained after Aligarh and Shikohabad flocked to him and he found himself in command of 15,000 men and 70 guns. Lake marched against him from Aligarh, and on the 11th September was fought the battle of Delhi. He had only 4,500 men; the enemy were in a very strong position with a swamp on each side, so that according to Thorn a frontal attack alone was possible. Then followed Lake's famous ruse. He feigned retreat with his cavalry; which simple manoeuvre drew the enemy out of their position in pursuit, to be met by the infantry in line. Lake could rely on the "personal equation" of Bourquien—"cook, pyrotechnist and poltroon," as one author calls him,—to make his ruse successful. The British infantry, led by Lake in person, marched through a storm of grape, fired one volley and charged. The enemy, for the first time in the history of DeBoigne's brigades, broke without showing fight; and then the infantry formed into columns of companies and let the cavalry through in pursuit. The defeat became a rout: they lost 3,000 men and 68 guns; Lake lost 477, of whom 131 belonged to the one English regiment, the 76th.

For the 76th cf. No. 64. The 2nd battalion, 15th N. I., are the present 2nd Queen's Own Rajputs. They were raised in 1798. They carry a third colour inscribed "Lake and Victory" for their valour at Delhi and Laswari; other honours are Deig, Bhurtপুর, Afghanistan, Kelat, Maharajpore, Punjab, Chilianwala, Goojerat, Central India, Afghanistan 1879-80, Burma 1885-8, and China 1900.

Major Charles Middleton, who entered the service in 1778, died of sunstroke. Robert McGregor entered the service in 1779, and Thomas Hill in 1799.

Paterganj is a village on the battle-field.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CATHEDRAL, SARDHANA.

- 41.—1795—LE VASSOULT, COLONEL. Inscription :—(Illegible, save the words "priez Dieu pour son âme; requiescat in pace;" and the date, 18th October 1795.)

[This tomb is mentioned by Keene, writing in 1880. The name was then legible, and it is this which permits of this identification of it with the last resting place of the brave Frenchman, Le Vassoult. Father Noti, however, quotes another inscription in the grave-yard as follows: "Ci-git N. Le Vassoult, âgé de 42 ans. Priez Dieu pour son âme." He describes the tomb as a low "platform in the middle of the graveyard." Very little is known of him before his marriage to the Begam Samru, which occurred either in 1792 or 1795. Before his marriage he commanded the Begam's Artillery, and now rose to the chief command. A man of birth and breeding, he despised his subordinate officers and showed the contempt which they certainly deserved. His marriage with the Begam,—a lovmatch on both sides, it is said—in all probability exasperated them : and unfortunately, as there were only two witnesses to it (M. Bernier and Colonel Saleur) the troops were able with some show of reason to denounce their relations as a mere vulgar intrigue. The troops were ripe for revolt, and a pretender was at hand. They entered into negotiations with Aloysius, or Louis, Balthazar Reynaul, Sombre's son by his first wife, to whom they swore fidelity. Le Vassault had obtained Sir John Shore's permission to take the Begam to Anupshahr, where an English brigade was stationed, on his way to a French settlement. In October he and the Begam left Sardhana—he on a charger : she in a palanquin. They had agreed that either of them, on learning the news of the other's decease, would die by his or her own hand. The troops pursued and caught them. The Begam stabbed herself, but the wound was not mortal. Le Vassault, thinking she was dead, at once blew out his brains though he could easily have escaped. We know little of the life of this chivalrous French gentleman, but we may well doubt if anything in his life became him like the leaving it.]

He was beloved and respected in life, and died as he had lived, a soldier without fear or reproach.

[Already mentioned as one of the witnesses of the Begam's marriage with Le Vassault, whom he succeeded in the chief command. He took no part in the revolt, and indeed it was he who induced George Thomas to restore the Begam to her dominions and drive out the usurper, Reynaud. He increased the strength of her troops to six battalions, with 40 guns and 200 cavalry. In 1803, he assisted Sindhia after his defeat at Ujjain with five very mutinous battalions. One of his battalions was destroyed at Assaye, but the others escaped.]

- 46.—1836—JOANNA ZEB-UN-NISSA, H. H. Begam Samru. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Her Highness Joanna Zeb-un-nissa, styled "the distinguished of Nobles and beloved daughter of the State," who quitted a transitory court for an eternal world, revered and lamented by thousands of her devoted subjects at her Palace of Sirdhana on the 27th of January 1836, aged nearly ninety years, Her remains are deposited underneath in this Cathedral built by herself.

To her powerful mind, her remarkable talent, and the wisdom, justice, and moderation with which she governed for a period exceeding half a century, he to whom she was more than a mother is not the person to award the praise; but in grateful respect to her beloved memory is this monument erected by him who humbly trusts she will receive a crown of glory that fadeeth not away.

DAVID OCHTERLONY DYCE-SOMBRE.

(Besides this, there are Urdu and Latin epitaphs to the same effect.)

[The real name and origin of this famous lady is uncertain. She is described variously as a Hindu dancing-girl, the daughter of a decayed Muhammadan nobleman of Kotana on the Jumna, and a Syudani, or descendant of the Prophet. "Zeb-un-nissa" is a title: Joanna Nobilis, her name after baptism. In the deed of gift of her property to Dyce-Sombre she is described as "Joanna Sombre, entitled Omdur cool Arakeen Ferdienze Azizun Zehool Nissa Begam." This however is merely a trophy of titles. This lady was married to Sombre (vide No. 25) at Sardhana by Muhammadan rites, and possessed very great influence over her husband. At his death his property passed to her. She was beautiful, clever and of a masculine spirit. She kept many foreign officers in her service: it was doubtless due to their persuasion that she was baptized into the R. C. Church in 1781. Among them were Pauly, George Thomas, Evans, Dudrence, Le Vassoult, Saleur, Col. Dyce, and Signor Solaroli. George Thomas gained for her almost the only military fame her troops ever obtained, when he rescued the Emperor in 1788 beneath the walls of Gokulgarh, and won for his mistress the title of "Zeb-un-nissa" (Glory of the Sex). But her troops were mutinous, as they were in her husband's time: and her more respectable officers, Thomas, Evans, Dudrence, left her one after the other. They were succeeded by Le Vassoult, a gentleman and a soldier, whom she married. It was apparently a match with love on both sides. But Le Vassoult was a strict disciplinarian, and his strictness drove the troops to mutiny in 1795. They swore to replace her by Sombre's son, Louis Balthazar Reinhardt (cf. No. 44). The Begam and Le Vassoult escaped. They had agreed to commit suicide in the event of capture: they were pursued and Le Vassoult blew his brains out: but the Begam's courage failed her, she only inflicted a slight wound on herself and was captured. Louis, her stepson, was installed as her successor: but George Thomas, forgetting the slights she had put on him, restored her to power by force. She joined the Marathas against the British, but her troops were defeated with great slaughter at Assayo. After the fall of Aligarh Robert Skinner induced her to submit to Lord Lake. When she arrived at the British camp, Lake rose from the dinner table to meet her: and in a moment of "enthusiasm," gave her a hearty kiss. Her attendants were startled: but the Begam, with considerable tact, described it to them as "the kiss of a Padre to his repentant child." It is easy to believe that "the red face and coat of this member of the church militant" struck these followers with a sense of incongruity: but Lake's boldness and the Begam's quick wit made the matter a complete success. She was confirmed in her estates, and maintained almost regal state at Sardhana, living on very friendly terms with the English. Amongst her visitors were such famous men as Bishop Heber, Lord Combermere and General Ventura. Her chaplain was Monsignor Scotti equally well known as "Father Julius Caesar;" her chief military officer was Major Raghelini; her minister of state was Col. Dyce; her Chief Magistrate, Signor Solaroli.

In 1834 the Begam, who was childless, adopted David Dyce Sombre, son of Col. Dyce, by a daughter of Louis Balthazar. She divested herself of her property by deed of gift in his favour. She sent a sum of £18,700 to the Pope, and asked him to elevate Scotti to the see of Sardhana, give her grandson a decoration and herself a relic. She had built a church to the Holy Virgin Mary: she had bequeathed a lakh of rupees to support a college at Sardhana "for making priests of the natives," and a similar sum for the support of the see. She had also bequeathed a lakh to the residency churches, Rs. 30,000 to the church of Agra, half a lakh in trust for the poor of Calcutta, another half lakh for the poor of Sardhana, and a third for charitable purposes in England. The Pope (Gregory XVI) granted her wishes, making Dyce-Sombre a Chevalier of the Order of Christ, and Scotti Bishop of Amathunda and Vicar Apostolic of Sardhana. This wonderful old lady died, at an age it is said of over 80, on the 27th January 1836, leaving about £700,000, partly in charities and the residue to Dyce-Sombre.

48.—1851—DYCE-SOMBRE, D. O. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of David Ochterlony Dyce-Sombre of Sirdhana, who departed this life in London, 1st July 1851. His remains were conveyed to his Native country, (in conformity with his wishes) in the year 1867, and are deposited in the vault beneath, near those of his beloved benefactress, Her Highness the Begam Sombre. He was born at Sirdhana, 18th December 1808, and married 26th September 1840, the Honorable Mary Anne Jervis, daughter of Edward Jarvis-Jervis, Viscount St. Vincent of Meaford in the county of Stafford.

[David Ochterlony Dyce-Sombre, was born in 1808, and of course named after Sir David Ochterlony, who, as the Dyce-Sombre law suit depositions show, was a close friend of the family. His father was Col. George Alexander David Dyce, who was the son of an English officer, a friend of Ochterlony's. G. A. D. Dyce was educated in the Military Orphanage at Calcutta, and was sent up by Ochterlony to be married to the daughter of Louis Balthazar Sombre, at the desire of the Begam. He of course found a post in her service, in which he remained till his overbearing temper caused his dismissal in 1828. His mother was the grand-daughter of General Sombre, but not by the Begam, who was no relation of his. David Dyce, as he was then, was brought up in the zenana, though he was also taught for a while by the English Chaplain at Meerut, Mr. Fisher. There is abundant evidence that in India he associated with English people and English officers at their messes and houses; but that his habits and his disposition were rather Oriental than European. In 1834, as already stated (No. 45), he was adopted by the Begam Samru as her heir. He was made a Chevalier of the Order of Christ by Pope Gregory XVI at her request. In 1838, two years after her death, he came to England; Robert Skinner wisely advised him not to do so; Lord Combermere advised him to the contrary. He was singularly ill-fitted for European life and European society, for he had Oriental ideas of society and the position of women, and was wilful to a degree that amounted to eccentricity. He fell in love with the Hon. Mary Jervis, a daughter of Lord St. Vincent, and married her in September 1840: it is said that his horror at the ordinary attentions paid to her by other men drove him to give up the intention for a time. He stood for Sudbury, and was returned in 1841-2: but he was unseated on a petition for bribery and corruption. Shortly after a commission declared him to be of unsound mind and put him under restraint. It is unnecessary to go at any length into the question whether he was or was not insane. There were found at least as many medical men to deny it as to affirm it. At the same time, though his extraordinary conduct was possibly explicable by his ignorance of European customs on the one side, and by his Oriental habits and character, especially his Oriental jealousy, on the other, it can hardly be considered surprising that a commission of English gentlemen, knowing nothing of India and its customs, declared him insane on the evidence before them. An instance of his ignorance of European customs was his curious ideas about duelling. He challenged a Director of the East India Company over a law suit, and he wanted his wife to challenge another lady. When asked whether, if the matter had come to a meeting, he would have expected his wife to fight, he naively explained that "he would have taken that on himself." In 1843 he escaped from his keeper and went to Paris, Rome and other parts of the Continent. In 1849 he wrote and published in Paris a "Refutation of the Charge of Lunacy" and in 1850 prepared a petition to the Houses of Parliament. He died in London in 1851. He made a will the items of which need not be dealt with, for though he made the Chairman and Deputy Chairman of the Court of Directors his executors, and these gentlemen fought the case in every court up to the Queen in Council, the will was negatived, and the property passed to his widow who subsequently married Lord Forester.

Dyce Sombre had two sisters, Georgiana, wife of Baron Solaroli, and Anna Maria or Ann May, wife of Col. J. R. Troup. He had no legitimate children. The landed estates were resumed by Government when the Begam died: but all the house, personal and funded property now belongs to Lady Forester or her heirs.]

Sacred to the memory of Julia Anne (Begam Sahib) the wife of Colonel G A D. Dyce, and daughter of the late Nawab Muzaffar-ud-daulah and Julia Anne, who departed this life Tuesday a.m., June XIII, A. D. MDCCCXX at Delhi. Aged XXXI years and V months. She was a tender mother, a sincere friend, and an affectionate spouse; to the distressed and unfortunate, a kind and liberal benefactress; her heart the seat of patience and sympathy, loved and respected by all who knew her and in death deeply regretted.

Bu. now she is dead, can I bring her back again? I shall go to her; but she will not return to me!

2nd Sam., Ch. F., 23rd.

This stone is inscribed by her disconsolate husband.

“Alas! in this neglected spot is laid
A heart once rull with the celestial fire;
Hands that the rod of Empire might have swayed
Or waked to ecstasy the living lyre.”

55.—1857—OFFICERS AND MEN, 60TH RIFLES. Inscription :—Celer et audax. Erected by the 60th Rifles in memory of—

Captain F. Andrews; Sergeant W. McPherson; Corporal T. O'Meaghe; Private J. Daring (a); Private S. J. Gainty; Private D. Tommisson; Private H. Armitage; Private J. Scriven; Private P. Quirk; Private A. Edmond; Private J. Casey; who were killed near this spot in action with the mutineers of the Bengal Army, on the 30th and 31st May 1857 (b); And of Sergeant R. Hackett; Corporal J. Sherry; Corporal J. Moore; Private J. Lehane; who died of sunstroke during the fight. They all belonged to the 1st Battalion, 60th Rifles, and were buried here. (c) And also of Ensign W. H. Napier, who was wounded on the 31st May and died at Meerut on the 4th June 1857 (d).

[This is a monument of Agra sandstone, fenced in by four iron standposts and a chain. The inscription is on all four faces, ending as at (a), (b), (c) and (d) respectively, in the order west, south, east, north. The Meerut Brigade under Brigadier Archdale Wilson, marched to join the Delhi force on the 27th May. It consisted of: Carabineers—two squadrons; 60th Rifles—a wing;

Scott's light field and Tombs's horse batteries; two 18 pounders; some native sappers and irregular horse. On the 30th they met the enemy at Ghaziuddinnagar (now Ghaziabad) on the Hindun, which was here crossed by an iron bridge. There was a brisk cannonade, but Tombs crossed the river and took them in flank. The Rifles drove the enemy from the guns: but Captain Andrews and four men were blown up by an ammunition waggon. The enemy were repulsed but next day returned. On this second occasion it was chiefly an artillery duel; and the enemy were finally driven back on Delhi by the Rifles. Ensign Napier was wounded in the leg, which had to be amputated. "During the operation no sign betrayed a sensation of pain. When it was finished, there came from him the bitter cry: 'I shall never lead the Rifles again.'" He died a few days later. The Rifles lost on the two days, besides these two officers, two non-commissioned officers killed and one wounded, ten rank and file killed and nine wounded, including three men sun-struck. This official return does not agree with the list on the tomb.

The 60th are of course the present King's Royal Rifle Corps. They were raised as a regiment of four battalions in 1755. By 1815 it had eight battalions, reduced by 1819 to two. Two more were raised in 1855 and 1857 respectively. The Indian honours of the corps are Punjab 1848 and 1849, Mooltan, Goojerat, Delhi, Ahmad Khel, Kandahar 1880, Afghanistan 1878—80, Chitral. The battalion at the Hindun and Delhi was the first. It also fought in Canada, winning the motto "Celer et Audax" at Quebec: in the W. Indies, the American War, all the Peninsula operations (sixteen battles and three sieges), the Kaffir War, the China War, the Red River expedition, the Afghan War of 1879-80, the Zulu and both Boer Wars, and the Egyptian and Soudan campaigns of 1882 and 1884.]

- 56.—1857—OFFICERS AND MEN, 2ND TROOP, 1ST BRIGADE, B. H. A. Inscription:—In memory of 1st Lieutenant Henry George Perkins, Bombardier Bernard Horan, Rough Rider Patrick O'Neil, Gunner John Riley of the 2nd Troop, 1st Brigade, Bengal Horse Artillery, who fell in action with the mutineers at the Hindan river on the 31st May 1857, nobly doing their duty. This monument is erected by their Commanding Officer, Colonel H. Tombs, in token of esteem and regret.

Lt. Perkins was the son of C. Perkins, born at Greenwich in 1840, and educated at Lewisham and Addiscombe; he belonged to Tombs's famous troop of Bengal Horse Artillery. General Wilson says in his despatch: "I have to regret the loss of Lieutenant Perkins, . . . an invaluable officer and a great loss to me." "I cannot cease talking of the splendid behaviour of Tombs's troop," writes Greathed; "the gun carriages are pitted with grape and shot marks, . . . he has lost, killed and wounded, thirteen men out of 50, but the action of the troop never ceased for a moment."]

Home and his Sappers laid the train which was fired by Corporal Burgess under a murderous rain of bullets—"a devoted and glorious deed" that earned Home the first V. C. won in India. He was killed by a premature explosion when blowing up the Malagarh Fort, near Aligarh, which had been held by a rebel named Walidad Khan.]

[When Holkar invaded this portion of the country in 1804, he found the district in a ferment, consequent on its transfer to the British, and he was at once joined by many of the zamindars. Dundi Khan of Pitampur, was one of these. He was crushed in 1805, but pardoned; his estates were given to his son, Ramnath Khan. This man gave fresh signs of disaffection, and was ultimately expelled in 1806. In 1807, the father and son mounted cannon in their forts of Kamona and Gunnaura and prepared to resist any attack made on them. After the necessary legal procedure had been tried and failed, Major-General Dickens invested Kamona on the 12th October and endeavoured to storm it on the 19th November, but was driven back with great loss. The fort, however, was evacuated five days later and Dundi Khan took refuge in Gunnaura, where he held out for three weeks, and then escaped. His estates were confiscated.]

ALIGARH, NEAR EAST INDIAN RAILWAY CROSSING.

- 64.—1803—OFFICERS AND MEN, 76TH FOOT. Inscription:—To the memory of the undermentioned gallant Officers, H. M.'s 76th Regiment of Foot: Captain Ronald Cameron, Lieutenant Michael Bayling Fleming, Lieutenant John Brown, Lieutenant and Adj't. Frederic Wm. St. Aubin, Lieutenant Arthur Cuthbert Campbell, who were killed during the assault in which the strong fortress of Aligarh, defended by a numerous and well appointed Garrison, fell to the superior energy of British valour and British spirit on the 4th September A. D. 1803. Also of Lieutenant and Adjutant William Meulh, Lieutenant John Henry Hurd of H. M.'s 76th Regiment of Foot, who lost their lives nobly fighting in their country's cause, during the memorable victory afterwards gained over the army of Dowlut Rao Scindia near Laswari in Hindustan by the British forces under the command of General Lake on the 1st November A. D. 1803. This monument was erected by their brother officers.

[The monument stands here: there were formerly two inscriptions, one in English, Urdu and Hindi, the other in English. The latter was renewed in 1892, and put up in the Fort. Aligarh had been very strongly fortified by Perron: as Lord Lake wrote, "a 74 might sail in the ditch." But Perron was no longer the man he had been, and was vacillating between Scindia and desertion. On the approach of the English he left his troops to a compatriot Pedron, whom he adured to hold out in a characteristically vainglorious letter, and fled. Pedron was no more inclined to fight than Perron and was deposed by his troops for a Rajput, Baj. Rao. The fort was stormed by four companies of the 76th, two battalions of the 4th N. I. and four companies of the 17th N. I. A party from the 76th seeing some of the enemy smoking near the gate, attacked them in the hope of being able to enter with them; this failed, but the party of the enemy were slain. At the firing of the morning gun, the stormers pushed up to the gate, covered by the fire of two batteries. In spite of a hail of grape shot, ladders were applied, though without success. A 12-pounder was brought up and for twenty minutes there was some brisk fighting as the enemy came down by our own scaling ladders to attack us. Col. Monson was wounded, four Grenadier officers and the Adjutant, all of the 76th, and Lieut. Turton of the 4th N. I. were killed. The 12-pounder battered down the gate and the troops poured into the fort, up a narrow circular lane under heavy fire to the second gate which was easily forced and so to a third, where the British got through before it could be closed. They were checked at a fourth gate; but on getting through this resistance ceased. 223 men were killed or wounded. All the five Officers were killed outside the first gate: also Turton (vide No. 58). "Their country, their friends and their King will receive consolation for their loss in reflecting upon the glory of their achievements, and upon the public advantage of their illustrious example," were the words of Wellesley's general order. The battle of Laswari completely broke Perron's power. It was fought against some seventeen of his battalions, with 72 guns and some four or five thousand cavalry. Lake came up with them after a forced night march of twenty-five miles and attacked them with the cavalry at once, without waiting for his infantry. Awful carnage on both sides was the result, without any definite result. At noon the infantry arrived and after some delay charged, with Lake at their head, and seized the guns. "The enemy fought like devils or rather like heroes" wrote Lord Lake. The 76th headed the attack. "It would be a violation of my feelings," runs Lake's despatch, "were I to close my despatch without bearing testimony to the gallant conduct of Major Macleod . . . of H. M.'s 76th Regiment, and of every officer and soldier of that inestimable corps." The 76th were with Lake at Aligarh, Delhi, Agra, Laswar, Dig, and Bharatpur. They are now the 2nd Battalion The Duke of Wellington's (West Riding Regiment). They were raised in 1787 and were in India from 1788 to 1803, 1816 to 1876 and 1897 to 1905. Their Indian honours are Hindostan, Seringapatam, Allyghur, Delhi 1803, Laswari and Deig.]

- 65.—'803—NAIRN, R., Major. Inscription:—Here lieth the remains of Major Robert Nairn who in command of the 6th Regiment, Bengal Native Cavalry, fell at the siege of Kachora on 12th March 1803. Reader, of him might in justice stand up and say all the world "This was a man."

[The Kutchowra which stopped and fought Lord Lake and killed the famous Major Nairn of tiger-killing memory." It was the fort of Adhikarin, a rebel zamindar, who, encouraged by the weakness of the Oudh Government, erected fortresses, trained soldiers and plundered the countryside—very much as the barons did in England in the reign of Stephen. These forts as a rule, though attacked by Lake in person "were not carried without the loss of many lives among whom was the gallant Major Nairn, who fell before the fort of Kachoura." It was one of many similar fights in what was known as the "mud war," from the mud forts attacked. Fanny Parkes' epithet "of tiger-killing memory" is explained by an anecdote told by Thorn. The incident occurred in 1803 at Kanauj. He describes how wolves, jackals and tigers secluded themselves in the ruins of splendid edifices "which formerly resounded with the voice of gladness." He then adds "On one of these hunting excursions a tiger of large size was shot with a pistol by General Lake, just as the ferocious animal was in the act of springing upon Major Nairn by whom it had been previously speared." There were giants in the land in those days.]

- 71.—1857—OFFICERS AND MEN, 6TH DRAGOON GUARDS AND 9TH LANCERS. Inscription :—In memory of the brave men who fell in the hour of victory at Gangiri on 14th December 1857, and whose mortal remains rest here upon the field of battle ; George Wardlow, Captain ; John Hudson, Lieutenant ; Sydney Vyse

Lieutenant; Joseph Barnett, Private; Robert Chapman, Private; Walter Cossar, Private; Allen Eastwood, Private: all of H. M.'s 6th Dragoon Guards (Carabineers), and John Dyson, Private; Henry Trampton, Private, of H. M.'s 9th (Queen's) Lancers.

(At Kanohi-Gangiri, in tahsil Atrauli, is a monument erected to the officers and men who were killed, fighting against the rebels in 1857. The monument is situated in the ravines, on the left bank of the Nim Nadi.

Cracroft Wilson's account of this affair is as follows:—Col. Farquhar with some 600 men and two guns was operating in and from Bulandshahr. There were five or six thousand rebels belonging to Fatehgarh at Sohawar, Patiali, Qadirganj and Mohanpur. Kasganj was seized by them: and partly on Wilson's representations a column marched from Delhi to Aligarh under Col. Seaton. The two columns then effected a junction at Gangiri, Colonel Farquhar arriving first, and encamped in a strong position. Gangiri is on the right bank of the Nim River, which is here crossed by an iron suspension bridge; and he encamped on the right bank, with his front protected by ravines and his rear resting on the village. The rebels at Kasganj decided to attack him next morning (the 14th.) But Col. Seaton meantime arrived and encamped on the left bank. In other words the river and ravines were between the two camps and Col. Seaton was nearer to Kasganj. The rebels arrived about 11 a.m., obviously unaware of Seaton's arrival: there was a brisk cannonade, and then the enemy's cavalry showed themselves in large numbers. Capt. Wardlow with his squadron was ordered up in support, with two more guns. The squadron charged, took three guns and routed the enemy. Capt. Wardlow then saw some rebels creeping away: he charged them and was shot through the head. Lieutenant Vyse was killed in charging the guns. Lieutenant (Wilson calls him Captain) Hodson was shot by some rebels he was pursuing through arhar. It appears probable that the charge was without orders. Wilson says that before leaving camp, some Dragoon officers were heard to mutter, "We will see who take the guns to-day,"—a reference to an incident at Narnaul. The charge would appear to have been a grave mistake. The rebels naturally thought they were opposed to Col. Farquhar who had no European cavalry, and by waiting, they might have been taken unawares and far more damage inflicted. The infantry never came into action at all. Three officers and six men were killed. "One noble looking Dragoon, stooping over the bed on which Lieutenant Vyse was lying, raised the corpse towards him and pressing it to him, said 'see Sir, he is but a boy,' while the tears trickled down his sunburnt face." (Wilson). A similar incident of course occurred at Lucknow, when Sir Henry Lawrence died. The 6th D. G.'s were raised at Monmouth's Rebellion in 1655. They fought in Marlborough's campaigns, at Sebastopol, Delhi, and in the Afghan and the last Boer war. The 9th (Queen's Royal) Lancers were raised in 1715. They fought in the Peninsula and last Boer War; otherwise their active service has been entirely in India. Their Indian honours are Punnier, Sobraon, Punjab, Chillianwallah, Goojerat, Delhi, Lucknow, Chamsiah, Kabul 1879, Kandahar 1880, and Afghanistan 1878 to 1880.]

AGRA DIVISION.

Agra District.

Agra had no history of importance before the time of Akbar. But in the three centuries that have since elapsed, it has been the scene of more history than many of its older rivals have been in all their lives. The European history--and it dates nearly as far back as its Muhammadan history--is as romantic as that of any city in the world. The adventures of the Armenians, a nation that traces its descent to Haik, the grandson of Japheth, an "European" nation which somehow got left behind in Asia, and "European" in every but the purely geographical sense; the history of John Philip Bourbon, a relative of Henry IV of France; the Jesuit missions to Akbar, and the dallings of that prince and his successors with Christianity: the trade missions and trade rivalries of English and Dutch: the tales of the military adventurers--such are the byepaths of history that Agra offers for exploration.

Agra naturally needs more detailed treatment than most districts. For this reason, I have given preliminary notes dealing with some of the main historical facts of which Agra's monuments are proof, and left only personal details to the notes on the tombs themselves.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CEMETERY, LASHKARPUR.

A.—The Armenians.—The Armenians, it is said, had traded in India as early as 780 A. D. Be that as it may, we find them already established in Agra in the palmy days of the Mogul Empire. It is said, for instance, that Akbar adopted the son of an Armenian merchant, Jacob by name; and attributed the birth of Jahangir in 1570 to their having erected a Christian church. Terry (1615), a shrewd observer, but distinctly biassed against everything that was not Anglican, said that "there are many Armenians...amongst them.....the greatest part of whose Christianity lies in their name. They made and sold wine, tasted too much.....by those too that make it." In 1609 William Hawkins arrived at Agra with letters to Jahangir from the King of England. Jahangir, says Hawkins, offered him a wife. "The king was very earnest with me to take a white maiden out of his palaceand he would promise me she would turn Christian. In regard she was a Moore, I refused, but if so be there could be a Christian found, I would accept it, at which my speech, I little thought a Christian's daughter could be found." But Jahangir produced an Armenian maiden, daughter of one Mubarak Shah; "and I, having passed my word to the king, could not withstand my fortunes," and so he married her. (At a later date she married Captain Towerson who was put to death at Amboyna in 1623 by the Dutch; and she and her husband returned to India in 1617, either to push her husband's fortunes in India, or to recover her father's estate. He returned to England in 1619, but she remained with her relatives.) Jerome Xavier, again, writing in 1598 from Lahore, mentions an Armenian who wanted to marry his deceased wife's sister (or his niece—neptem—both versions are given); but in spite of an appeal by the Armenian to Akbar Xavier managed to prevent the marriage. About 1604, some Armenians conspired with an English heretic (John Midnall) and some Portuguese malcontents against the Jesuits and gave them a good deal of trouble. References to Armenians in the letters of the English factors are frequent, e.g., in 1619 Kerridge writes of a quarrel in which some Armenian merchants were concerned, and asserted "that the custom of Turkeo ingagethe the consule or cheife to answer the defects of all other men of their nation."

That the Armenians were not all the mock Christian wine bibbers Terry calls them, some of these references, as well as several epitaphs show clearly. The Armenian community was undoubtedly numerous and wealthy.

B.—The Jesuit Mission.—Christianity found its way to Agra at a very early date. There are, or were, Persian documents in the Agra Mission archives, to show that a Father Joseph bought 12 (or 72) bighas of land in Lashkarpur for the use of a cemetery to be held free of rent. This father was probably Joseph da Castro (see further on passim). A lady named Mariam Pyari also granted two groves for the same purpose. The present cemetery is on these 12 bighas. As early as 1576, Akbar's attention was drawn to Christianity: and missions were sent to Agra from Goa at his request both in 1580 and 1590. The third and most important left Goa in 1595, under Fathers Jerome Xavier and Pinheiro, and Brother Benedict Coes. Akbar received them kindly: they were allowed to build a church at Lahore in 1597. Akbar allowed conversion, but would not himself be converted—"reuerunt filii usque ad partum, sed virtus non est pariendo"—as the Fathers wrote. Still the Jesuits had several converts of high rank. In 1605 Akbar died, still unconverted. Jehangir was even more liberal to the Jesuits than his father; he allowed them to build church and college at Agra, with free liberty to preach or convert as they pleased. Withington, an Englishman, writing in 1614 (he was a factor of the E. I. Co.), says, "The Jesuits have a very faire church, built by the king, and a house. The king allows the chiefe 7 Rupias a day, and the rest 3, with license to convert as many as they can, which they doe, but alas! it is for money's sake." Terry says much the same; and also tells the history, how two of Akbar's brother's sons were baptized and then expressed a desire for Christian wives. The fathers would not grant them their request: whereupon "they delivered up their crucifixes into their hands and so left them." But Terry is in error; it was not Akbar, but Jahangir who had allowed the conversion of his nephews, the sons of his brother Danyal. Roe and Hawkins are divided as to whether this was an act of policy—to discredit possible heirs to the throne with the populace,—or due to a desire to have Portuguese ladies, the converts' wives, to grace his own seraglio. Finch describes how the three (not two) princes were conducted to the church to be christened, "by all the Christians of the citie, some sixtie horse, Captaine Hawkins in the head of them, with St. George's colours carried before him."

About 1621 was built the Jesuit college at Agra, founded and liberally provided with funds by a rich Armenian, Mirza Zu'l Qarnin, governor of Sambhar. He gave them lands at Bandra in Salsette and at Parel in the Island of Bombay: the rents were applied to the college.

These places were chosen as in Portuguese territory and safe from arbitrary exactions on the part of the Emperor.

Shah Jahan, a strict Muhammadan, treated the Christians with considerable severity. It is however doubtful whether his cruelties were not prompted as much by political as religious considerations. For this point, vide No. 77.

The Jesuits' influence lasted till 1759, when king Joseph of Portugal expelled them from his dominions; and those that were caught were taken to Lisbon and thrown into prison. With Tieffentaller and F. X. Wendel, the Order died out in Upper India. The results of their mission have been belittled by many. Terry writes that their conversions were mock-conversions: they worked "upon the necessity of some poor men who for want of means are content to wear crucifixes." Withington says much the same, adding that the converts "brought them their beads again saying they had been so long without their pay and would be Christians no longer." But we also find them blamed for devoting their attention too much to the court. But these criticisms must be largely discounted. Terry and Withington wrote as men born under Elizabeth naturally would write: they are biased critics. Jesuits, always and everywhere, have made the best of missionaries. Picked men of more than ordinary ability, education and self devotion as they were, they could not have preached the gospel for two hundred years without achieving better results than a little mock Christianity induced by gain and if they devoted themselves rather to the upper than the lower classes, they had no small measure of success, though they never realized their dream—a Moghul Emperor who should be a Christian. The imperial grants to them, the presence of Christians in the court and seraglio, the very numbers of the Jesuits themselves, show that they were regarded without disapproval, if not with actual favour. So after two hundred years of vigorous and fruitful life passed away the old Agra Jesuit mission, founded by a heathen Emperor, and exterminated by a Christian king.

But though orders change, the church remains. As early as 1703, the prefecture of Tibet and the "adjoining countries" was erected, and entrusted to the Capuchin Fathers of the Marca D'Ancona province. In 1823, the Tibet-Hindustan mission was born: the first Vicar Apostolic was the Right Reverend Z. Benucci, O. C. In 1886 Pope Leo XIII made the Vicariate-Apostolic a metropolitan see, of which the M. Reverend M. A. Jacopi was the first archbishop.

C.—Other Europeans in Agra.—The inscriptions that follow show that Agra from 1611 to 1800 was a cosmopolitan rendezvous. We find there Europeans of all nations, English, Dutch, French, Portuguese, Italian, German, Flemish, even Swiss. Who were these people and how did they get here? The Jesuits, of course, account for a considerable number of the inscriptions. Indian converts to Christianity who took European names, (of whom many are mentioned by Manucci—cf. for instance, no. 108 and the note to no. 114,—and the offspring of mixed marriages account for others. And after 1760, the influx of European military adventurers and the European flotsam and jetsam that they collected as subordinate officers explain most cases. But between 1611 and 1760, there are still many cases unexplained.

It is important to notice that the East about this time was overrun by Europeans of all sorts. There were settlements of all nations, especially English, French, Dutch and Portuguese, not only at Surat and Goa, not only in India and the Spice islands, but in Persia, Arabia, China and even Japan. We read of a diplomat accredited by Charles II. in exile to the Shah of Persia: he found traders of all nations there. Jesuit priests are mentioned as reaching Agra from Tibet. There are letters extant from English-traders in Japan and China; and the quarrels of English and Dutch in the Spice islands are history, and had far-reaching consequences at home, as well as in the East.

These settlements were primarily trade settlements: but they served as magnets for all sorts of persons interested in the East. Servants, artisans, tradesmen, sailors, soldiers, physicians, priests, explorers and diplomatists all congregated there on their way up country, and in going up country naturally gravitated to Agra. For Agra was one of the imperial towns in the Moghul dominions: if it was not the oriental London, it was at all events the oriental Windsor. And so we hear that Dara at the battle of Samugarh in 1658 had 200 European artillerymen; Mir Jumlah and Aurangzeb also employed such men as artisans; Veroneo the reputed designer of the Taj, Austin of Bordeaux, who is responsible for some of the Agra Fort decorations, and Bronzoni (no. 112), are instances. Of tradesmen there were many; for instance, Bravet the Frenchman, who got 60,000 rupees from Jahangir for some worthless French bric à brac. Of physicians, Manucci himself, of more or less bonâ fide travellers, Tavernier, Bernier, Manucci the Jesuit, Manrique, and Tieffentaller are examples; of scientists one may mention Roa, Strobl and Gabelsperger. Among English diplomatists alone there were Hawkins, Sir T. Roe, Lord Bellomont (sent by Charles II. to the Shah of Persia and the Moghul Emperor to enlist their aid in his restoration) and Sir W. Norris. Earliest visitor of all perhaps, and by no means the least notable, is Jean Philippe Bourbon de Navarre, a scion of the French royal house. It is not therefore strange, what with Jesuits, factors, soldiers and all this polyglot assemblage of visitors of all kinds, that the old Roman Catholic cemetery is well-filled.

(References: Manucci; Foster; Hunter.)

D.—The Padre Santos chapel.—This building dates back at least to 1611. Tieffentaller writes of it as follows. "To its south (i.e. of the cemetery) is a high and spacious vaulted building with pointed floral decorations inside; a sort of chapel where lie the sacred bones of the fathers, which are venerated not only among Christians, but Mahomedans and Gentiles, especially those of the venerable father Marc Antoine Santucci, an Italian, whose tomb they adorn with their offerings and accomplish their vows (vota facta exsolunt) because of the renown of his pure and holy life." The name by which it is known "Padre Santos" is possibly a corruption of Padre Santucci though Father Symphorien (Agra Archaeological Society's Transactions, 1876, page x) explains it as "Padre Santo" or holy father, and says it is so called from the martyrs D' Anhaya and Garcia. The other explanation, backed as it is by Tieffentaller, certainly seems more probable. Originally it was probably the tomb of Mortenepus—whoever he was—for his tomb is the oldest and most conspicuous tomb in the place. The other epitaphs, save Santucci's, are on the flags of the pavement. I give the complete list of inscriptions found in the Archdiocesan calendar, placing in brackets those parts I could not decipher myself.

E.—Other Roman Catholic cemeteries in Agra.—Father Hosten, S. J., on the authority of F. Felix, O.C., mentions three cemeteries at Agra; Lashkarpur cemetery, the graveyard of the old R. C. Cathedral in Padre Tola, and a cemetery about a mile north of Lashkarpur. Mr. Irvine in a note in his edition of Manucci, quoting the Agra Archaeological Society's Transactions, says the same thing. I was not able to discover any statement to that effect in the Transactions (which will not surprise any body who has seen them); but they mention the discovery of some Portuguese inscriptions "on a low mound under a tree 60 paces from the north wall of the enclosure of the tomb of Abul Ala and about $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile from no. 4 milestone on the Poya Ghat Road". This site appears to correspond to the site mentioned by Father Hosten. The discovery was made by "A. C." (whom I suppose to be Dr. Christison) in 1870 though the discovery was reported only in 1876.

The Lashkarpur cemetery is not more than half full even now and is still in use. There seems no obvious reason why this other cemetery should have been required. From such dates as we have, the period when the third cemetery was in use appears to be roughly 1730 to 1770. And we find a distinct gap in the series of inscriptions of the Lashkarpur cemetery proper between 1728 and 1771. I cannot of course assert that there are no tombs of that period, for though I looked at every tomb and took down every inscription which was at all legible up to 1800, there are both illegible inscriptions and tombs with no inscriptions. Still this considerable gap is significant. Further, we know that Father F. X. Wendel petitioned Shah Alam in 1775 that the cemetery might be restored to the Jesuits; which shows that by order or force, it had previously been taken of them. The possible cause is said by local Agra authorities to be the "absence of the Jesuits." (They always had their headquarters there and there was always a Jesuit Rector of the college; but after the suppression of the Order, there were very few, who had to travel far afield. There might well have been times when there were no Jesuits in Agra; and it would be during such an absence that the cemetery was resumed.)

It is significant that in the Padre Santos' chapel, we find only six inscriptions between 1706 (the year before Aurangzeb's death) and 1767. Of these five are Jesuits and one a Carmelite. Further, of these six five died elsewhere, as their inscriptions record—at Delhi, Narwar, Janagar (Jainagar), Troyabad (which may be Faizabad); and the sixth, (Strobl) died at either Jaipur or Jainagar. From 1633 to 1706 twenty Jesuits died; from 1706 to 1767 only six. It is obvious that the Jesuit mission began to decline with the death of Aurangzeb. There is evidence of this in the history of Tieffentaller's life; but apart from that, it is only what might be expected. Agra, after Aurangzeb, was no longer the Moghul capital; the Jesuits followed the court. It was, moreover, between 1722 and 1773 a bone of contention to be fought for by Moghul, Maratha and Jat. From 1722 to 1738 Jai Singh of Jaipur held it for the Moghul; from 1758 to 1773 Maratha and Jat held it against him. In such troublous times it is not surprising that the Jesuits left Agra. It is quite possible that some of these inscriptions are merely commemorative and cover no grave though Father Hosten has expressed to me an opposite opinion. Nothing is known of the persons commemorated save Gabelsperger and Strobl. Further, in 1759 the Jesuits were expelled from the Portuguese dominions, in 1764 from France, and in 1773 the Order was abolished altogether by Clement XIV; and so all recruitment from Goa was stopped.

From 1773 however we find the Moghul once more in possession of Agra; which doubtless explains Wendel's petition in 1775. And it is to be noticed that between 1707 and 1775 we find only three inscriptions in the cemetery. Two are Armenians, and one of them a "Captain" doubtless a military adventurer, the other is Madec's child who died in 1771, when her father was in the Jat service and the Jats still held Agra. It is not difficult to suppose that they allowed him to bury his child where he pleased. From 1775 the series commences again.

It is not unlikely therefore that the cemetery was resumed by some definite order of some governor of Agra, and if so, probably by Jai Singh. But even if it was not, it is highly likely that it was not particularly safe in the absence of the tolerant Moghuls, and the presence of Maratha and Jat ruffians, for the deceased's relatives to confess Christianity by burial in so obviously Christian a spot. And this may account for the graves in the immediate vicinity of a Muhammadan cemetery, certainly the tomb of a famous Muhammadan saintly personage like Abul Ala. It is quite possible that this spot was never consecrated at all; though in all probability its site had belonged to the Jesuits who owned a good deal of land in and round Lashkarpur, for we find it resumed by the British government in 1824. And though their "cemetery" was probably disused before this date, it doubtless fell into neglect then, until at last the tombs disappeared altogether, to be restored to the light of day by Dr. Christian.

PADRE SANTOS' CHAPEL.

74.—1611—MORTENEPUS. Inscription:—Here lies the Holy Khoja Mortenepus who was a professed disciple of Jesus Christ and who was a righteous man. Whatever he had he gave in charity to the poor, in token of fidelity to his Divine Master in the year 1611 from the birth of Christ. (Translation from Armenian and Persian, now scarcely legible.)

[Nothing is known of Mortenepus. I am informed by Mr. Ellis of the India office that the name itself is no Armenian name; and that possibly "Martin epos," (abbreviation for episcopus or bishop) is correct, though if "Martin" was a bishop, Khoja (which is a title of respect for merchants=Khawaja) must be wrong. As every other inscription in the chapel is that of a cleric, the probability that this man was a priest is considerable. The translation, which is from the Persian, first appeared in the transactions of the Agra Archaeological Society for 1874. With the help of the District Engineer of Agra I have succeeded in getting a reading of the Persian inscription. It is as follows:—

این جا مدفونست خواجه مرتینپس ارمنی مقدسی که خود را غلام
 کریستیس میگفت چون صاحب خیر بود هرچه باخود داشت بفقر
 آنحضرت بفقرا ایثار کرد در سنه یک هزار و ششصد و یازده از تواتر

[In 1631-2, Shah Jahan besieged and took the Portuguese settlement at Hugli, and sent some four thousand captives to Agra, where they were sold as slaves. There is a story that four priests were torn in pieces by wild elephants. It is related in the Bengal Catholic Herald for 1842, but there seems no authority for it whatever. There is a further story to the effect that Father John da Cruz was brought into the arena to undergo a similar fate, but the elephant refused to attack him and on the contrary fawned on him: and that Shah Jahan, much impressed, released the captives and sent them back to Bengal where they built a town, Bandal, in 1633.

Everything goes to disprove this story. If the captives were sent back in 1633, how came Garcia and D'Anhaya to be in prison in 1633 and 1634? Further, as late as 1640, we find Manrique, S. J. with the assistance of Da Castro, obtaining the liberation of Antonios da Cristo, prior of Hugli, from Asaf Khan in Lahore; so that a Hugli priest was in prison no less than 8 years after these events. The fact is simply that Shah Jahan, though a strict Muhammadan and no lover of Christianity, was moved to wrath rather by the aggressions of the Portuguese than by the religion of the Jesuits or Augustinians who were proselytizing in Bengal; and they suffered quite as much because they were Portuguese as because they were Christians. Bernier indeed says that all through these troubles the Jesuits at Agra were left unmolested in their Colleges. Bernier, however, is probably exaggerating: one Jesuit (Fialho) was killed in 1633 "with scimitars, in the Moghul Empire;" and Da Castro is said to have been scourged, bastinadoed, and otherwise maltreated. At all events, Shah Jahan's wrath cannot have lasted long—even if these cruelties to Fialho and Da Castro are to be laid to his charge at all,—for obviously, a sycophant in power might well imagine that he would please the king by such rigours. For we find Manrique honourably received in 1640; we find the Jesuits as numerous and as influential as ever after 1634. Soon after that date, too, we find them with all their old privileges. The story of the soft hearted elephant is said to rest on certain manuscripts; but one may take leave to doubt those manuscripts as Father Hosten does.]

[Corsi was a Florentine born in 1575. He entered the Order in 1598 and in 1599 was sent from Portugal to India, where he lived ordinarily in the house of the Great Moghul. He learnt to speak Persian, Urdu and Arabic, all well, so Jerome Xavier tells us. The relations between Roe and Corsi were very amicable. Terry describes him as a man of a severe life, yet of a fair and an affable disposition: "he lived at that Court as an Agent for the Portuguese." Corsi suggested to Roe that they should disguise their religious differences, lest it should be "a very main obstacle . . . unto his great design . . . to convert people to Christianity." Roe states that he instructed Jahangir's brother's sons, and goes on to tell the story about the Portuguese wives. He also tells a story of how Corsi's house and church was burned and nothing but the crucifix saved—"which underhand was given out for a miracle." Corsi however told Roe privately it was no miracle, "insinuating that the Moores had caught up this opinion of miracle without his consent." Jahangir however challenged Corsi to throw the crucifix into the fire. Corsi refused, saying that "God was not tyed to the call of men . . . but offered to enter the fire himself for proove of his faith," which the king refused. He is mentioned on more than one occasion as mediating between the English and the Portuguese. It is clear that Roe had a great liking for him, and used him as a friend: he constantly mentions services Corsi rendered him, and Terry tells us Corsi used to visit him about once a week. Curiously enough, so far as I have been able to discover, Roe only mentions his name once—in a letter to the Lord Bishop of Canterbury; everywhere else he refers to him as "the Jesuite."]

83.—1646—DA CASTRO, J., Padre. Inscription:—Aqui iazo P. Ioseph da Castro, faleceo aos 15 de Dezbre d' 1646.

[About this father the following facts are known:—

- (1) There is a letter from him to Father Claude Aquaviva (dated Agra 1615) in the British Museum.
- (2) In 1617 he went to arrange for the purchase of the Salsette and Parel lands, for which Mirza Zu'l Qarnin found the funds (cf. note B.)
- (3) In 1635, he was tortured, as a result of the Hugli persecutions (cf. No. 77.)
- (4) In 1637, he was at Agra and reported Drake's death to the English factors at Surat (No. 173.)
- (5) In 1640, he was in Lahore and assisted Manrique, S. J., to obtain the liberation of the Prior of Hugli (cf. No. 77.)
- (6) Father Hosten asserts that he was the Father Yusuf, or Joseph mentioned by Panthome as obtaining a firman from Akbar. (Query. Was this the firman referring to the cemetery, mentioned in Note B. ad init? See note on page 39.)
- (7) Mr. Irvine identifies him with Manucci's "Padre Atash."

The "Padre Atash" tale is one of several variations of a story referring to a suggested ordeal by fire to test the comparative value of Christianity and Muhammadanism. Manucci's story is that a certain father offered a Qazi the ordeal: both were to sit on a fire of straw with Bible and Quran respectively in their hands. The Qazi refused, and Jahangir at once dubbed the priest "Padre Atash." Bernier has another version, in which the Padre is already known as "Padre Atash" from his fiery temper, and Jahangir suggests the ordeal. Budaoni and Abul Fazl tell a similar tale of Aquaviva (in which Jesuit and Qazi change roles): and Roe has a similar story to tell of Corsi, already related (No. 81.)

The claimants to the name are:—

- (1) Manucci's Joseph da Costa, a Portuguese.
- (2) Corsi (Roe).

(3) A Florentine, (Bernier) and

(4) da Castro, (Irvine.)

Mr. Irvine quotes Marucci, S. J., who mentions a "J. da C. (so written in Mr. Irvine's note), a Piedmontese, who died last year aged 70 years, of which 35 were spent in the Indian Mission. His services were especially valuable after the siege of Hugli." This book of Marucci's was written in 1651, so that "last year" means (in default of more definite evidence) a year preceding 1651. Mr. Irvine identifies "J. da C." with Da Castro. His note is a little confused, as in one place, quoting Keene, Mr. Irvine, says Da Castro died in Agra in 1646; and in another, quoting this inscription, says Da Costa died in Lahore in 1646. There can be no doubt of the identification: we know Da Castro was in Agra in 1615, so that no less than 31 years out of Marucci's 35 are accounted for; and there is no question that Da Castro did render valuable services after the sack of Hugli. But the further identification of Da Castro with Manucci's Da Costa is less plausible; at all events there appears to be nothing whatever to support it.

Bernier says Padre Atash was a Florentine and this remark probably points to the truth. Manucci and Bernier, it must be remembered, were both reporting the story as told them some thirty odd years after the events, and the evidence of both is equally valuable or valueless. But when we find a very similar story told by an eye-witness, namely Roe, of Corsi, who was a Florentine, it seems very probable that Manucci and Bernier are relating somewhat garbled versions of the events related by the English ambassador, but Bernier has got the right man. It may be objected that Roe says nothing of the name "Padre Atash," which to some extent is the point of the story as related by Manucci. But if Padre Atash was, as Bernier says, an already existing nickname, one can quite understand that Roe would not think it worth while mentioning. If, as Manucci says, it arose out of these events, then Roe, who was no Persian scholar, may not have understood the imperial jest; or if he did may not have thought it becoming to mention it in a letter addressed to the Archbishop of Canterbury. At all events it seems more likely that we have here three versions of the same story than three (or even two) different stories. One can hardly suppose that offering ordeals by fire to persons who never by any chance accepted the offer had grown into a positive habit at Jahangir's court.

The Joseph da Costa (no. 92) who died in 1685 is clearly barred by dates. He must have been a raw lad at the most in the reign of Jahangir (1606-1627.) [References: Roe; Manucci; Bernier; J. A. S. B., Vol. LXX; Hosten.]

84.—1656—CESQUES, A., Padre. Inscription.—Aqui iazo P. Antonio Cesques faleceo aos 28 d' Junho d' 1656.

[Antonio Cesques, or Ceschi di Santa Croce, called Father Chesco by Manucci, was born at Borgo (Val Sugana) in 1618, entered the novitiate at Rome in 1638 and came to Goa in 1645. In 1648 he went to Lahore as confessor to a Christian Governor called Mirza (query—Mirza Zul Qarnin? cf. no. 82) and came to Agra in 1651. He is mentioned by one authority (Fr. A. de Rhodes, "Voyages and Missions" 1854) who met him in Surat on their way from Goa: "The two others were Fr. Anthony Ceski (sic) a German, and Fr. Henry Busce, a Fleming, both of them young men already in priest's orders, with aptitudes for learning the languages of the country. The letters I received lately in Rome (1651-2?) tell us of the great fruits which accompany the labours of these . . . fathers." This would be in 1648; and as we shall see later (No. 88) Busce also went to Agra in 1648. It is also mentioned that Fr. Roth composed at Trent an eulogy of "Fr. Anthony Ceski, (sic) died 1656, whom he had known in the Missions."]

[Padre D'Orville (or Derville) was a Belgian born at Brussels. He went as a missionary to China in 1657 and laboured in Shansi. He was an associate of Fr. Martin Martini, editor of the Novus Atlas Sinensis. In 1661 he returned with a certain Father Grueber by way of Lhassa and Tibet. They also preached in Nepal. Thevenot amongst his collection of travels has the "Voyage à la Chine, des P. P. J. Grueber et D'Orville." There is also a letter by Grueber himself in which he thus describes D'Orville's death: "Hinc Battanam (Patna?) Bengal ad Gangem sitam urbem, et Benares urbem academia Brachmanum celebrem, ac tandem Agram Mogori regiam attulerunt: ubi P. Albertus D'Orville, itinerum fractus laboribus, intra paucos dies, meritum cumulo plenus, relicta terrestri in coelestem patriam, uti pie credimus, abiit, media Europam inter et Chinam via." This return journey commenced in 1661.]

Of this inscription only the figures "6" and "7" remain. Busi or Buis was born at Nimeguen in 1613, entered the Society at Mechlin in 1632, taught mathematics at Lisbon for four years and then went to India in 1647. (Mr. Irvine confuses him with a kinsman Hendrik Uwens, following Hazart: but Uwens went to China. The above facts are stated by F. Hosten.)

He was a mathematician and taught the subject in Lisbon, which may partly account for his selection as instructor to Dara. Dara was very fond of him: "he hearkened of late very willingly" to him and began "very well to relish" what he suggested. When about to be executed by Aurangzeb, Dara wished, but was not allowed, to see Buses, and died with the words on his lips "Muhammad mara mi-kushad, Ibn Ullah mara jan mi-bakshad." Buses is described as a man of judgment and learning, hale and hearty, of a fine presence and very polished. He was well known to Bernier and was one of his sources of information. We are told that he once gave expression to the somewhat unchristian opinion that the only way to preach in India was with a well sharpened sword. His death was the result of an extraordinary action on his part. The relapse of a convert made him very ill. His age and feeble condition forbade bleeding him and he himself opened his bowels and removed a part of his colon. It does not sound like Buses and is quite possibly untrue.]

89.—1668—ROA, H., Padre. Inscription:—Aqui iazo Pe Henrique Roa faleceo aos 20 de Junho de 1668.

Heinrich Roa or Roth (born 1620) was a native of Dillingen (Hosten), Dillingen or Augsburg (Irvine.) He came to the East via Smyrna and Ispahan, whence he wrote a letter, dated 1651. He was first sent to Salsette, and thence as rector to the college at Agra. Bernier knew him there, and obtained much information concerning religious and philosophic beliefs of India from him. He is said to have been a Sanskrit scholar and have written a work on Sanskrit grammar—"Exactissimum opus totius grammaticae Brahmanicae ejus et rudimenta is primus Europae communicavit." He also wrote an account of the Christian community at Kabul, which he visited on an overland journey to Europe in 1662 to ask for a new batch of missionaries at Rome. We have already found him pronouncing an eulogy on F. Cesques in 1664. He returned to Agra in that year. Mr. Irvine tells me that Roth's Relatio is in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris: whilst in the British Museum, in Kircher's "China Illustrata," there is a map showing Roth's route from "India" into "Mogor"—via Goa, via "Vistiapoor," Ratipoor, Delhi, to Agra, and another showing the route of fathers Grueber and Roth from Agra to Europe.]

I.—Further note on the Inscriptions in the Padre Santos Chapel.—I endeavoured to decipher these on three occasions—in March 1909, in March 1910 and July 1910. On the last occasion I had the advantages of three previous readings of varying dates—one by Colonel A. S. Allan (published in the Bengal Catholic Herald of September 1849), one by A. C. (Dr Christison,—published in the Transactions of the Agra Archaeological Society of 1876), and a third by Father Felix, O. C. (published in the Archdiocesan Calendar, 1907.) For these I am indebted to the kindness of Fr. Hosten, S. J., St. Xavier's College, Calcutta. The readings given above are my own and except in minor points correspond with those of A. C. (Such minor points are that I read e.g. clerigo where he read clerico.) Blanks now illegible I have filled up from these earlier readings.

F. Felix's list was, I understand, compared with an old manuscript in the archives of the mission. The result is many glosses of some commentator, which though of value in themselves should not be and never could have been, in the inscriptions—for the sufficient reason that there is no room for them. Several inscriptions (placed in square brackets) are put in the list on the authority of F. Felix: they have now disappeared altogether, whilst one at all events was never in the place to which his plan assigns it because there is no room—though it may have been somewhere else. This is no. 93; that of the Carmelite monk. All the Armenian inscriptions (save that of Khwaja Mortenepus) were on the walls and are now hidden behind a veil of whitewash from which I hope that some day they will be rescued.

I give below a few notes which may serve to show where I have ventured to diverge from former readings in important points. I do not give small details of spelling.

Da Fonseca (no. 80).—Allan reads "Fonseca," Felix "Foseca," A. C. "Fonsega." The 6th letter of Fonseca might be anything, but "c" seems most probable.

Santucci (no. 93).—All I can get is—

..... O. MAR.
..... ATUCCI.
..... DE.

1689.

"Allan read the last line de Agosto de 1689; A. C. notes that it is illegible. The proposed restoration in the note on the tomb is from Felix, omitting the gloss "Italus." He gives the date variously as "1" and "10".

Strobl (no. 104).—All I could read was—

.....
..... AOS 30 DE.
..... MA DE 1758.

A. C. records it as illegible, Allan read it as "Aqui iazo P. Andre Strobl faleceo aos 30 de Marco 1758. "MA DE" is very much effaced and might be "Marco." Felix reads (with two glosses) "Aqui iazo P. Andre [aliter "Padre"] Strobl [nascedo (aliter "nacido") em Schvandorf (aliter Schrandor) no Palatinato (aliter "Calatinato") Superior faleceo em Agra aos 30 de Marco de 1758".

Xavier (no. 103).—The place of death is in italics and very difficult to read. It looks more like "Toyubad" than anything else. Allan omits it, A. C. reads it "Toyebad." Felix "Foyabad."

Derville (no. 86).—Allan and A. C. read Derville as I do. But the name was really Dorville or D'orville, which Felix reads.

Buses (no. 88).—Allan read "Aqui iazo Pe useo faleceo aos 6 d'Abril de 1667" A. C. calls the inscription illegible. F. Hosten conjectures, from Allan, "Pe Henrique Buseo", Felix reads (with two glosses) "Aqui iazo P. Henrique Buses faleceo [em Delly] aos 6 de Abril 1667 [colonienensis Germ-ensis]." I have adopted F. Hosten's reading; all that is now left is the 6 and the 7.

Da Costa (no. 92).—Allan read "Aqui iazo Padre Joseph da Costa da Compa de Jesu, Morto em Deli aos 21 de Marco de 1685."

A. C. read "—ui iazo Padre fh da Costa mpa de Iesu reo em Deli 21 de Mar de 1685."

Felix reads as Allan, with the exception "faleceo em Dely" for "morto em Deli."

Putting all these together, I think there can be no doubt that the true reading is "(Aqui) iazo Padre (Josep)h da Costa (da co)mpa. de Jesu (mor)reo em Deli (aos 21) de Mar.co) de 1685."

22. De Paiva (no. 96).—A mess has been made of this inscription though it is absolutely clear.

Allan's reading was right save that he made "Pexaop" instead of "Pexaor."

A. C. read as Allan, down to "1706"; when he goes on "Efoise Puefado aos 10 de Fevra da mesma hera." He, Father Symphorien, and Führer following them, both make a fresh person of "Efoise Puefado" or "Puefada"; an error even F. Felix follows. The inscription means merely 'F. Joseph da Costa died in Pexaor on 7th January 1706, and was buried on 10th February of the same year.' F. Felix inserts a gloss after "Fevro" which betrays the hand of the scholiast, and shows that this view is correct. It reads "mores a anno de 1706" (mores=moreo or morreo)—"died in the year 1706."

De Magalhães (no. 95).—De Mages is on F. Hosten's authority an abbreviation for "De Magalhães;" "que morreo" is simply "who died." A. C. gets the inscription correctly, but Allan turns the name into De Magesque and Felix into "de Magathenesque," or into "De Magathenes," in another place.

Besides those readings there are lists of the names, only more or less correct and complete, given by Felix (1906), Symphorien (Agra Arch. Soc. Trans.) and Fanthome.

II.—The alleged firman of Akbar (page 34).—Father Hosten's kindness has put at my disposal the following extract from an unpublished letter of Da Castro's dated 1637 to the General of the Society at Rome. After detailing how the Jesuits had been expelled from their college and church he says "on the day of the Immaculate Conception (8 December 1636 (?) I, having made many requests through the King's father-in-law (Asaf Khan), our ancient friend and the ancient protector of all the Christians, we were on the above-said day granted by the King not only the favour of returning to our college but also the permission of asking whatever requests we might make, to wit, leave to administer freely the Sacraments, to bury our dead after our own manner in the cemetery given us by his father and confirmed to us by him." He also mentions the destruction of the Churches at Lahore and Agra.

This seems to point to a necessary reconstruction of the history of this cemetery.

It dates back certainly to 1611, the year in which Mortenepus died; but it is improbable that it is much older. The firman alleged to be Akbar's states that one Padre Joseph was to possess certain lands he had bought, free of rent, and to use it for a cemetery. It cannot be Akbar's as it is dated 1035 A. H. or 1624 A. D., in Jahangir's reign. Yet we know Jesuits owned the cemetery as early as 1614 for they buried Mildenhall there in that year. Doubtless the land was bought between 1605 and 1611 by Padre Joseph, and made rent free by Jahangir in 1624, which explains both gift and confirmation mentioned in the letter quoted. That Padre Joseph is Da Castro is almost certain, for no other "Joseph" was in Upper India in the first decade of the 17th century.

CEMETERY PROPER.

105.—1614.—DE MENDENAL, J. (MILDENHALL, J.) Inscription.—Joa de Mendenal, Ingles, morreo aos 1(...) de Junho de 1614.

[It is known that John Mildenhall (aliter Midnall) died in Ajmer 1614. It is further known that he was a Roman Catholic, and that he was buried in Agra. There is no other Englishman of a name which could possibly become "de Mendenal" in a Portuguese inscription who is known to have been in India at the time. Furthermore, there was at the time no other place of sepulchre in Agra save this cemetery. It seems therefore certain that this tomb is the resting place of John Mildenhall: this is the opinion of Mr. Foster, of the India office, a well-known authority on this period. The tomb therefore is an important and interesting tomb, as it is the oldest English tomb in the province, or in all probability in India.

John Midnall (to spell his name in the way Mr. Foster considers most probably correct) has no small fame of his own: but he has, in addition, gained an entirely spurious fame as Queen Elizabeth's "ambassador" to the Great Moghul. The story has passed unquestioned through the pages of various historians, till it culminated in a certain well-known London periodical, which not only dubbed him "ambassador," but gave him a knighthood, and published a fancy picture of "Sir John Mildenhall" being received, with a large suite, by the Emperor (who, as an article in the "Gentleman's Magazine" points out, is represented some twenty years too old and several shades too dark.) As a matter of fact, Midnall was an ordinary, in some respects a very ordinary, London merchant: the famous "letter" sent by Elizabeth through him, was nothing more nor less than a "letter commendatory," such as any traveller could obtain, a mere passport, such as at a later date are mentioned as sent out by the company in batches to their servants, with blanks for the names. It is true that Midnall chose to represent himself as an ambassador, and to play the game for all it was worth: but that was merely the man's characteristic impudence.

Our knowledge of Midnall is derived chiefly from two letters of his own which are printed in "Purchas's Pilgrimes," and scattered references in Purchas' works and the letters of the servants of the East India Company. Of his early years we know little. On the 12th February 1599, he started on his famous voyage to the East Indies. He arrived in Constantinople in October and stayed "about his merchandize" till May 1600. This long stay is an incidental proof that he was no ambassador, or he would have gone direct to Agra. Thence he travelled via Aleppo, Julfa, Tabriz, Kazvin, through Yezd and Seistan to Kandahar, and finally reached Lahore in 1603. He requested permission from Akbar to present himself at court and "treat of such business as I have to do with him, from my Prince." Admitted to Akbar's presence, he demanded, in Elizabeth's name, permission to trade, and also to attack the ships and settlements of the Portuguese, as being enemies of England, and to keep them if taken. Akbar consulted the Jesuit fathers present at the time, one of whom was probably Jerome Xavier. They naturally opposed him, and told Akbar the English were thieves and Midnall a spy, who meditated designs on the Emperor's ports. The Jesuits were in high repute, and Midnall's requests were politely ignored, but in the end he obtained, or at all events says he obtained, "farmans" for all his demands save that of permission to attack the Portuguese. Playing his part of ambassador to the last, he insisted even on this, and at last was given the perfectly useless concession; and so he returned home, to try and sell his concessions and his own services to the East India Company for "£1,500 in hand." They refused to buy: and in 1609 he petitioned James I for permission to use his privileges and trade on his own account. The company, dismayed by this action, had thoughts for a while of employing him, but ultimately decided not to do so.

Midnall disappears till 1614, and we then find him on a second and much more discreditable voyage to the East, which commenced, it would seem, in 1611. He absconded to Persia with goods which had been entrusted to him to sell in the Levant. Two English merchants, Newman and Steel, pursued him and compelled him to restore the value of the goods; then he and Steel came on to India, and Midnall fell ill at Lahore. Purchas hints that he had intended to poison three fellow-adventurers so as to obtain possession of the whole of their joint property and drank of the poison himself by mistake, but the story has no confirmation. There were many natural ways of death available to one who had ventured across Persia to India thrice. He got as far as Ajmer and there died; he was, as a Papist, buried in Agra by the Jesuits. He left his property to two natural children of his in Persia, and made a Frenchman, Augustine by name, (whom Mr. Foster is inclined to identify with the famous Austin of Bordeaux) their executor. Kerridge attempted to get possession of his property on behalf of the company, and ultimately succeeded in obtaining £500 which he sent home, in spite of the opposition of the results. It is from Kerridge that we obtain definite confirmation of the fact that Midnall was buried in Agra. He writes (Factory Records, Surat volume 84, part I, page 181) that out of his estate rupees 250 were given to servants and for the "carrying of Midnall's corpse and interring at Agra."

Midnall was not an estimable character : but, with the exception of the three refugees from Goa (Needes, Fitch and Newbery), he was the first Englishman who visited Agra and spoke face to face with Akbar. It is the intention of Government to put a tablet with an English inscription on his tomb.]

- 110.—1640—VERONEO, F. Inscription :—Aqui jaz Ieronimo (or Jeronimo) Veroneo faleceo em Lahor 2 d'Agosto de 1640.

[Considering that the tomb of this famous old worthy is close to Hessa's tomb right in the pathway of people going to the Padre Santos chapel, and that archaeologists have been at work on that chapel off and on ever since 1875, it is more than a little surprising that, so far as I can discover, no previous mention of the grave has been made. It is possible that such an announcement lurks in the back numbers of some learned society's journal ; but certainly it does not appear to be generally known. Mr. Havell, for instance, in his criticism of the Taj and its designers in the June number of the "Nineteenth century" for 1903, makes no mention of it. (I have since learnt that this tomb was first discovered in 1905 by Mr. F. O. Oertel and Mr. A. G. P. Pullan, O.S.)

There is little that is known about Veroneo, though he has acquired a possibly spurious fame as the Taj's designer. I summarize below what is known of him. There is first, Manrique's famous statement, a bone of contention among antiquarians, that connects him with that famous building. "El architecto destas fabricas," he writes, "fue un Veneciano por nombre Geronimo Veroneo que passo a aquellas partes en las naves de Portugal y murio en la ciudad de Laor poco tiempas antes de ma llegada." "(The architect [or designer] of these buildings [i. e., the Taj] was a Venetian, by name Geronimo Veroneo, who came to these parts in the Portuguese ships and died in the city of Lahore a short time before my arrival.") Manrique reached Agra on December 14-24, 1640. In 1637 we find him reporting Drake's death (no. 191) to the Surat factors ; he is there described as a Venetian jeweller and Manucci states that some of the Portuguese captured at Hugli (1632) were released "through the money paid by a Venetian my compatriot, called Hieronimo Veroneo, a man ransomed by the Portuguese." (What the last few words mean is very dubious.) And save the other details given by Manrique about his connection with the Taj—how the Padshah told him to build a grandiose monument to his dead consort, and how he produced various designs which were rejected as costing too little, and he was told to spend three krores—this is absolutely all that is known of him though we also know that the ubiquitous Father Da Castro was his executor, and told this story to Manrique (cf. no. 83). This is not the place to discuss the much debated question of the origin of the Taj. The curious can see the one side presented by Havell in the "19th Century" of June 1903, and the other by F. Hosten in J. A. S. B. Vol. VI, 1910.

Veroneo, in one way, is in a similar case to Mildenhall. Both have won fame for actions which it is dubious whether they ever really did. But the old English rascal was himself the cause of his ill founded celebrity, the worthy Venetian owes it to a writer whom he never even saw. On one point, I may however venture on a protest. Mr. Havell says, "He (Veroneo) returned to Lahore and poured the gurbled account of his doings (with Shah Jahan) into the too credulous ears of Father Da Castro, who retailed it as history to his fellow priest." I venture to suggest that this statement is a trifle hard on Veroneo and Da Castro. Between 1631 (when the Taj was apparently commenced), and 1641 when Manrique came to Lahore, Da Castro would certainly have found out that Veroneo had nothing to do with the Taj, if indeed this was so. It would have been a futile and ineffective lie of Veroneo's which could not escape being found out. And a very strong point in favour of Veroneo's having designed the Taj is that the ultimate authority for the statement is Da Castro—one of the noblest missionaries even the Jesuits have ever produced. He was not the man to back a lie, which would have in any case no point save being "ad majorem gloriam" of Europeans; for Manrique came through Agra and must have known the truth himself.

[Hortenzio Bronzoni, a Venetian lapidary, is first mentioned as sent to cut a large diamond presented by Mir Jumla to Shah Jahan, which stone is held by Ball to be the Koh-i-nur. Tavernier calls him Hortensio Borgio, and in telling this story adds that he cut the stone very badly. He is again mentioned as making a model ship of war for Aurangzeb who had been annoyed by the depredations of some Portuguese pirates, and was anxious to create a navy. It was set afloat in a tank and manoeuvred by some European artillerymen; and the sight convinced the Emperor that a navy was beyond his powers. Bronzoni's wife was a Hindu (or negro) slave, doubtless a convert, named Suzana Borges. She was a widow, with a son Nicolao Borges, who married the daughter of one Francisco da Souza. Manucci tells a curious story of her use of magic to discover how long this girl had to live. It is possible that Francisca Borges (no. 108) is this girl, or a relative. The date of no. 108 is uncertain; I made 1624 of it, but another officer read it 1654. The latter date would agree with this supposition. Manucci does not actually say so, but it is not probable that the girl lived particularly long in the circumstances.]

He was taken prisoner by the British, and served in their army, but deserted from that too and raised a body of troops, both French and sepoys; and from 1765 to 1777 he lived as "a guerilla leader,"—which in the circumstances could only have been a polite term for a highway robber. He served also under various princes, but always under the French flag: amongst these were the Nawab of Oudh, Shuja-ud-daula, till his defeat at Buxar: and then the Jats. He left their service in 1772 and it was doubtless during his service with them that this child of his died. In 1772 he joined the Moghul Emperor, and after many valuable services was made a Nawab. After his defeat by the Jats and Marathas he went back to Pondicherry and helped his countrymen against the English. In 1778 he returned to France where he died in 1784. He is confused both by Compton and Malletson with Madec or Medec, another adventurer of a much lower type.]

(With an only partially legible Persian inscription which contains a chronogram of the date of death, and which is, according to most authorities, wrong.)

["So much only is certain, that he was a German." So says Father Noti in his book "Das Fürstentum Sardhana." The generally accepted version of Walter Reinhardt's parentage is that he was "a sort of German," as Keene puts it, the son of a Saltsburg or Strasburg butcher. Polier (quoted by Noti from the Asiatic Annual Register of 1800), who knew Reinhardt, says he was a carpenter born in Strasburg and that his name was Balthasar. Others (Colonel Skinner for instance) say he was born in 1720 in Luxembourg. The Calendar and Directory of the Agra Archdiocese has two other, in some respects, contradictory accounts. From the burial register that is, or used to be, in the archives, it appears, on the strength of a birth certificate, that his name was Joseph Joachim Reinhardt, born at Piel in Tyrol on the 19th March 1732. And in the same archives, there used to be a curious old MS., undated and unsigned, which stated that his name was Joannes Reiner, born at La Rochelle in Luxembourg in August 1707, the eldest son of Martin Buzerin Reiner and his wife Catherine Rosport, who were immigrants from Tyrol. I understand from Mr. Irvine that Father Noti is now of opinion that Reinhardt's father came from Tyrol to Luxembourg, that the name was originally Reiner, and that descendants of his relations still live in a village near La Rochelle or Fels, and that one of them is constantly hoping to receive millions from the Indian Government. This MS. looks like very interesting confirmation of Father Noti's view. None the less, in itself, it is so full of extraordinary statements, some improbable, some practically impossible, that it can hardly be held to prove it. It asserts for instance that Reinhardt went to India in 1744; that a nephew of his (born in 1752) came out to him in 1772, could not find him, and was never heard of again till 1857, when the family of General Sombre found him by advertisement. He was then in flourishing circumstances. Lastly, in May 1840, Dyce Sombre is said to have been hunting for his ancestor's relatives in Treves. Now in 1772 Sombre's name was a byword in India, and it is indeed curious that his nephew could not find him. In 1857 this man was 105; he had been lost for 85 years: and he suddenly emerges from the mists, a centenarian in flourishing circumstances—"enjoying success", as the MS. puts it, at an age when he might have been expected to be past enjoying anything. Further, in 1857 General Sombre's family consisted of two ladies, Baroness Solaroli and Mrs. Troup, both of whom appear to have been in Europe, and who had probably never heard of their long-lost relative. As for Dyce Sombre, he was undoubtedly in Brussels in October 1840 but on his wedding tour (he was married in the previous September). But this only makes it the more unlikely that he was in Treves in the preceding May. This MS. may be of value, taken with other evidence, to assist in the proof of Reinhardt's Tyrolese origin: but by itself, it looks only like a rather crude attempt to trace a connection with the extremely wealthy Sombre family.

To pass on to less disputed facts, Reinhardt came out to India in the French service, either as a sailor, or as a soldier in a French regiment. The date of this is uncertain, it may have been as early as 1746, or as late as 1750. Whether he was or was not a soldier in the first place, he soon became one—probably under Labourdonnais and Dupleix. Subsequently he deserted to the British, and became a soldier in a corps of Swiss mercenaries in the employ of the Company. The date of this is also uncertain: but it may well have been, as Keene says, after the defeat of the French, which led up to the peace of 1754. He served with them for a time—probably not a long time, though different tales put it as low as 18 days (Compton) and as high as 2 years (Keene). He then deserted to Law at Chandarnagore, rose to be a sergeant, and in 1757 when Chandarnagore was taken wandered about Bengal, taking service first with Suraj-ud-daula, then with a rebel faujdar at Purnea, and lastly with Kasim Ali Khan's Armenian General, Gregory. Here he rose to command a battalion. In 1763 he stamped his name with infamy by the murder of the British residents of Patna whom Kasim Ali had taken prisoner. When the British advanced he fled to the Nawab Wazir of Oudh, Shuja-ud-daula. He was given a strong force—4 battalions of infantry, one of cavalry and a force of artillery. After the battle of Ruxar, his surrender was demanded by the British as a condition of peace. The Nawab replied that arresting a general at the head of his troops was easier said than done; but he offered to assassinate him in the presence of duly accredited representatives! The offer was declined and Reinhardt clinched the matter by robbing the Nawabs' Begams, and his late master, Kasim Ali, and marching to Rohilkhand. There he took service with Hafiz Rahmat Khan, and later with the Jat Raja of Bhamatpur. Him he deserted in 1775, when Mirza Najaf Khan, Wazir of Shah Alau, defeated him in battle, and passed over to the victor, who gave him a rich estate round Sardhana, and Rs. 65,000 per mensem for his services. This estate he retained till his death in 1778.

Many hard things have been written of Sombre. He was illiterate, cruel, avaricious and unscrupulous: he had little personal courage and no military skill. He had some low cunning: almost his only virtue was that he despised ostentation. His troops, seldom paid, were generally in a state of mutiny, and adopted, if the stories told are true, somewhat high handed measures to obtain their money, e.g., sitting Reinhardt astride a gun that was burning hot in the sun. His officers were the dregs of European society. His troops never lost a gun, or gained one: but were "remarkable for judicious retreats." It is not certain how he got the name of "Sombre." One statement is that it was due to his complexion; another that he enlisted in the British service as "Summers" or "Somers" or "Sommer" which was first softened by Indian tongues into "Samru" and then dignified into Sombre. Whatever its origin, no nickname was ever more happily given.

He married a Muhammadan woman, name apparently unknown, by whom he had a son Louis, or Aloysius, Balthazar Reynaud or Reinhardt (vide no. 41). At Sardhana he married the famous Begam Samru (vide no. 46).

[General Perron, born Pierre Guillier (1755-1834) was a famous military adventurer. He went out to India in 1780, deserted—the preliminary step of most French adventurers,—and entered the service of the Rana of Gohud about 1781. In 1790 he joined De Boigne. He fought at Patan and Merta, won the battle of Kurdla against the Nizam and lost a hand at the siege of Kanauud. In 1796 he succeeded De Boigne and subdued Rajputana and George Thomas. He was looked on, rightly or wrongly, as an instigator of Bonaparte's designs on India, and the war of 18-3 was as much directed to crushing his very great military power as to crushing Sindbia. After the capture of Algarh, he was superseded and surrendered to Lake. He retired to France in 1805. Perron's first wife was a Mlle. Derridon, and these are probably her children though it is quite as likely that they were the offspring of a less reputable union. When he returned to Europe he had two children by an Indian mother with him, who spoke no French. One of them, a girl, married M. Alfred de Montesquieu. Perron settled down near Vendome and married a Mlle. du Trochet, by whom he had a large family. For the Derridons see no. 250.]

As tribute of their affection and regard this monument is erected to his beloved memory by his disconsolate widow, Anne Hessing, and afflicted sons and daughters, George William Hessing, Thomas William Hessing and Magdalene Sutherland. He was a native of Utrecht in Holland and came out to Ceylon in the Military service of the Dutch E. I. Company in the year 1752, and was present at the taking of Candia by their troops. Five years afterwards he returned to Holland and came out again to India in the year 1733, and served under the Nizam of the Deccan. In the year 1784, he entered into the service of Madho Rao Sindhia and was engaged in the several battles that led to the aggrandizement of that Chief and wherein he signalized himself so by his bravery as to gain the esteem and approbation of his employer, more particularly at the battle of Bhondagaon near Agra in the year 1787, which took place between this Chief and Nawab Ismael Beg, when he then became a Captain, and was severely wounded. On the death of Madho Rao Sindhia in 1793, he continued under his successor, Daulat Rao Sindhia, and in 1798 he attained to the rank of Colonel and immediately after to the command of the Fort and City of Agra, which he held to his death.

[There is little to be added to the history given in the epitaph. He was born in 1740. There is no record of his adventures between 1763 and 1784. He served in De Boigne's brigades of regular troops. The "several battles" are Lalot, Chaksana and Patan. After Patan, he quarrelled with De Boigne and left him but Madhoji Scindia employed him to raise a bodyguard for him, which grew to 4 battalions. In 1800 he was compelled to resign his command by ill-health and retired as commandant of Agra to that city. He is described as a "good, benevolent man and a brave soldier." His tomb is a miniature of the Taj in red Agra sandstone.]

[The De Silva family, as I am informed by Mr. J. F. Fantome, who knew many of the later members of it personally, are of good Portuguese descent, as the use of the prefix "Don" in this inscription testifies. Their ancestor, also a Don José, came up country from Goa at an early date and settled down in Jaipur. This Don José was, like many of his descendants, a physician. He had two sons of whom one stayed at Jaipur: the younger Don Ellis or Ellice (no. 160) settled down as a physician in Bhartpur. Of his three sons two migrated to Bhopal: one succeeded to his father's practice at Bhartpur, Augustin (no. 166). His only son was Joseph Augustin (no. 173), a man of a very strong personality, and a doctor of considerable merit, charitable to a fault in the exercise of his profession; a ripe Persian scholar, and the author of a monumental work (as yet, I believe, unpublished) in which he compares the Misrani or Vaid,

Greek or Yunani, and European methods of medicine. He died childless : and so ends a most interesting link between West and East—one of the many that exist, all but unknown, in such old world places as Agra, where from early days Anglo-Indians most did congregate.]

[This tomb and the next two appear to be those of descendants of John Philip Bourbon of Navarre. No. 162 is that of Simi Bibi Anna, daughter of Inayat Masih, wife of Pedro Bourbon. No. 163 is that of Pedro Bourbon alias Imdad Masih, son of captain Khairat Masih. Pedro Bourbon died at Bhopal.

The history of the Indian Bourbons is extremely curious. John Philip Bourbon was a relative of Henry IV of France, who slew a relative of rank in a duel, and fled to the East. He landed "at Madras" where one of his companions, a priest, remained. Bourbon sailed on to Bengal and so up country to Delhi, where Akbar gave him a post at Court, and married him to Lady Juliana, sister of the Emperor's Christian wife, a lady doctor in charge of the health of the seraglio; he himself was put in charge of the women's apartments, a post which his family held till the sack of Delhi by Nadir Shah in 1737.

In that year Francis, great great grandson of John Philip, was head of the family. He collected all the members of the family in Sirghur Fort, in the state of Narwar—some 800 souls. In 1778 however the Narwar Raja massacred all the family; only Salvador, great grandson of this Francis, with his mother and a few children escaped. Among these was Pedro, his cousin, great great grandson of the said Francis. Salvador and Pedro took service in Bhopal, where his descendants still live. He and other members of his family served that state with great efficiency and they possess a considerable estate there.

Kincaid (Asiatic Quarterly Review) gives a genealogy of the family. But he admits that his materials were scanty, and his tree is probably incomplete. Pedro may or may not be the Pedro above mentioned; it is not impossible, but there is nothing to show it one way or another. The fact that there is an Indian as well as an European name has many parallels in the genealogy. Anthony Bourbon, no. 155, is even more difficult to fit into the pedigree than Pedro Bourbon. If it be complete, the only place that seems to fit her in Mrs. Salvador Bourbon, in which case she was a Miss Thome.

Kincaid admits that his very interesting article is based on scanty materials. As a matter of fact, it raises some very difficult points. The words "at Madras" are italicized above because there was no "Madras" to land at till long after 1550; if it is not an error, it must mean merely the "neighbourhood" of the present Madras." But more important still is the question of Akbar's Christian wife, whose sister Juliana John Philip married. C. A. Kincaid, in "Tales of the Tulsi Plant" refers to a Portuguese work called "Una dona Portuguesa na corte do grande Mogal", by Ismael Gracias. He states that in the time of King John III there was at Lisbon a home for orphan girls who were shipped out to the colonies to make wives for the officials and settlers. Such an one was Maria Mascarenhas, who with her sister Juliana were captured by the Dutch, and sold at Surat. She became one of Akbar's Queens. It was this lady who is the Maria Makany whose room is shown at Fatehpur Sikri and it was her sister who married John Philip Bourbon.

This tale appears at variance with several facts. We are told that when the Moghul army attacked the Portuguese in Bassein and Damaun in 1581, they were repelled, but "the repulse would have been followed by an attack in force.....had the Emperor not been stopped by.....the powers or tears of a Lusitanian lady." In other words, Maria Mascarenhas was married to Akbar before 1581. Yet the Dutch E. I. Co. was not even founded till 1594.

so it is difficult to see how the Dutch sold her at Surat for a slave. Apart from this, the Jesuits never mention a Christian wife, which they would certainly have done if one existed. Moreover, Jerome Xavier was a Navarrais as Bourbon was: and he could hardly have failed to mention circumstances so interesting as the marriage of a descendant of Clovis to a sister of a Portuguese wife of Akbar. Father Desideri, S. J., in 1714, a traveller in the E. Indies, mentions a Lady Juliana Dias da Costa who was esteemed for her medical knowledge: and the Vicar Apostolic of Agra in 1832, says the Jesuits first gained Akbar's favour "per impegno di una certa Signora Giuliana di Goa che come dottoressa si trovava nel seraglio del suddito imperatore"; but this lady must not of course be confused with Akbar's alleged sister-in-law. Father Hosten holds that Akbar's Christian wife is a myth. But it is impossible to get away from the well attested fact that Bourbon did marry a Juliana at Akbar's court, and this tale of Garcia's at least explains how there came to be one at the court for him to marry.]

CATHEDRAL.

OLD ROMAN CATHOLIC GRAVEYARD.

- 175.—1785—TIEFFENTALLER, J., Padre. Inscription :—Pater J. Tieffentali obiit Laanoi 5 June 1785.

[This tombstone is in the graveyard at the back of the old Roman Catholic Cathedral, now used, I am told for Indian Christians and close to the new Cathedral; I saw it myself. I lay stress on the point because many people are under the impression that the Agra slab was removed to Muttra. According to the Calendar, there are, or were, similar tombstones at Lucknow and Muttra. The one at Muttra is still there—in the house of the Roman Catholic Chaplain. Nobody seems to know anything about the Lucknow tomb. One can understand a tombstone at Lucknow where Tieffentaller died, and at Agra where he is buried; but it is difficult to see why there should be one at Muttra. He certainly went there in 1745; but he also went to many other places. It is just possible—either that the Muttra slab is a rejected stone (similar to the ease mentioned in the introduction): or that somebody removed it to Muttra, perhaps at or after the mutiny, possibly for safety. Nor is there any doubt that Tieffentaller is the correct spelling of the name; it was the way he spelt it himself. Joseph Tieffentaller was a native of Bolzano (Botzen) in the Austrian Tyrol. (Botzen is the Pons Drusi of the Romans.) He left Germany in 1740 and stayed two years in Spain. In 1748 he sailed from Lisbon to Goa and thence went to Surat in the same year. He was probably destined, says Father Noti, for Jai Singh's observatory; but Jai Singh died in 1743, and Tieffentaller went to Agra as a teacher at the Jesuit College. He was a man of considerable linguistic attainments: he spoke German, Italian, Spanish and French, wrote good Latin, and acquired a good knowledge of Urdu, Persian, Arabic and Sanskrit. He eventually composed a Sanskrit-Persian dictionary and wrote some treatises in Persian. He was also a mathematician and astronomer; in fact well-equipped for the geographical labours to which he devoted himself. He went first to Daman and returned to Surat, whence he proceeded by land to Broach, and thence via Udaipur and Jaipur to Dig and Agra, making many scientific observations on the way. He reached Agra at the end of 1744. He took the latitude of Agra and then (1745) went to the observatory of Jai Singh at Muttra, and also visited Brindaban. In 1746 we find him back in Agra and in 1747 with Strobl at Delhi. Thence he was sent to Narwar (C. I.); his new duties were to attend to the spiritual needs of a Christian community at that place. In 1750 he went to Gon, via Malwa and Bombay. He stayed there 6 months, and then went by Surat on a journey through Bombay and Gujarat to Marwar, Jodhpur and Ajmer; and in 1751 reached Narwar once more. He next travelled to Gwalior, Gohad and Agra and returned the same year to Marwar. He stayed here for some little time, with occasional excursions to Delhi, Brindaban, Agra and Kotah. He had good reasons to remain in Narwar: for in 1759 occurred the persecution of the Jesuits by King Joseph, and to leave the safety of Moghul dominions for Portuguese territory was to court imprisonment. The Order of Jesuits was abolished by Pope Clement XIV in 1773; and he had now no friends in India save F. X. Wendel. His Christian community at Narwar dwindled away, and he found himself, in 1765, penniless.

"Me trouvant embarrassé pour ma subsistance," as he writes, he determined to go to Bengal, relying on the charity of the "famous English nation so well known for their humanity, liberality and charity to the poor". He then travelled to Allahabad via Datia, Jhansi, Mahoba, Kalinjhar, Chitrakot, Chhatrapur, Panna and Ajaigarh. From Allahabad he went to Lucknow, Fyzabad, Jaunpur, Benares and thence by boat to Calcutta, landing at Patna, Monghyr, Rajmahal, Magadabad (now Murshidabad), Kasimbazar, Hooghly and Chanderannagore, and returning the same way, during which journeys he took observations and drew a map of the Ganges. Unfortunately he gives no details of his life in Calcutta, nor of how the English justified his trust in their liberality. Father Noti supposes that he was well treated, or he would have returned to Europe in an English ship by sea. We may hope so for the credit of our countrymen. In 1766 he visited the English camp at Kora and then went to Lucknow, whence he traversed the whole of Oudh during the years 1766-1771. He had an assistant "versed in geography" whom he sent, e.g., to the cataracts of the Ghagra. His other works he states to be (1) a Latin work on the religion, ceremonies and customs of the idolaters, and the Gymnosophist philosophy; (2) a work on natural history; (3) a work on climatic and astronomical phenomena; (4) a little work on the sources of Indian rivers. The second and third works are said to have been lost. His editor, Bernoulli, does not regret that loss: for he says that the good father had not the requisite knowledge to do the subjects justice. But as has been shown, Tieffentaller was a man of wide learning, and his views were probably valuable.

His great work, "Descriptio Indiae", is, as one writer says, "curious and interesting." It is not, perhaps, of much value now, save for his chance references to people and facts that he observed. But that is not to depreciate it. The discoveries of each succeeding geographer annul those of his predecessors: but one does not despise Ross because of the discoveries of Scott and Shackleton. Tieffentaller had a very large share in the progress of the geographical knowledge of India, at a time when it was especially valuable. Unfortunately it is largely neutralized by the lack of maps, which, it would seem (J. A. S. B. 1872, an article by A. S. Allan) were destroyed with other of his records at Lucknow in the mutiny. But his value is considerable all the same, as gazetteer writers know. Father Noti says that Growse is the only Anglo-Indian writer who honours his memory by a laconic reference. But Anglo-Indian writers pay him the far greater honour of using him, as will appear from a cursory glance at any gazetteer, at all events of this province.]

[This is no doubt a relative of the famous Filozes, but whether a sister of Jean Baptiste and Fidele, or a daughter of one of them, does not appear. After serving the Rana of Gohad, he joined De Boigne, but subsequently raised a force of his own, of 11 battalions. He finally had to fly owing to a piece of treachery that failed,

Fidele also was in Seindia's service and was imprisoned for treachery and committed suicide in prison. Baptiste fought against Thomas but was meantime corresponding with him: his troops were in part broken up at Assaye and he himself escaped to Rajputana where he rejoined Seindia and remained in his service till 1843, by which time he had become Seindia's Commander-in-Chief. After Punniar, Seindia's army was broken up and Filoze lost his employment. He died in 1864. His grandson, Sir Michael Filoze, is still employed as an architect at Gwalior. An inscription in the Cathedral shows that he restored and enlarged it in 1835.]

In 1775 we find him petitioning the Emperor Shah Alam for the return of the cemetery, which had presumably been confiscated, and a parwana of the Emperor is extant confirming him in possession. He attended the Kabul troops at Firozepore, was present with them at Maharajpore, administering to their spiritual wants when cholera was afflicting Agra in 1843, and raging in Meerut in 1845. He was seen day and night in the hospitals, venerated and beloved by Catholics, esteemed and admired by those of a different creed. Friend to all, and enemy to none, zealous for the honour and glory of God, unaffected in his piety and devotion, compassionate to the widow, orphan and poor. He sealed his glorious course with his blood for the sake of those whom Christ had redeemed. (B.O.).

PROTESTANT CEMETERY.

A.—The English Factory at Agra.—The tombs of Offley, Drake and Purchas are memorials of the old English Factory at Agra. They with Midnall's tomb (no. 105 in the Roman Catholic cemetery) are evidence of more than that. They are a proof, and the only proof in the United Provinces, of the antiquity of the British connection with India. As Sir W. Hunter points out, the Anglo Indian cyclical year dates back not only to Plassey and 1757, but to 1657, the year in which Cromwell granted his charter to the East India Company; and even to 1557. For British India is the result of a world-old struggle for Eastern trade and Eastern trade-routes: the English Muscovy Company, which tried to control Eastern trade by trans-continental routes, was a move in that struggle: and it was in 1557 that Anthony Jenkinson, a servant of that company, met the Indian merchants at Bokhara—the first Englishman to penetrate so far East. These old English merchants would indeed have been surprised, even shocked, to learn that they were pioneers of an Empire. But they were,—sic monumentum requiris, circumspice.

The first adventure to India from England, made in 1589, the year after the Armada, was a failure. In 1600 the first charter for Eastern trade was granted to the Earl of Cumberland, and 215 knights, aldermen and merchants, trading under the name of "the Governor and Company of merchants of London trading into the East Indies." It is unnecessary here to tell the tale of all the various "joint stocks" and separate voyages; for our concern is only with Agra. In 1608, Hawkins landed at Surat and made his way to Agra with letters to the Great Moghul: but after a struggle of five years to obtain leave to trade, returned unsuccessful in 1612. In 1613 Paul Canning went to Agra to sue for a farman and died there: the same year his place was taken by the well-known Thomas Kerridge, and Withington; and in 1614, Edwards went there as resident factor with seven subordinates—Kerridge, Withington, Mitford, Browne, Younge, Ufflet, and Fettiplace. Sir Thomas Roe landed in 1615, and met the Emperor in 1616 though he was never in Agra; after much opposition from Shah Jahan, then Prince Khurram, he obtained farmans in 1618, and returned home in 1669, having proved a very "Joseph in the court of Pharaoh." Other factors of the time at Agra were Hughes, Salbanke (1617), Biddulph (1618), Parker (1619), Young (1620). Fettiplace died there in 1621.

But bad times were in store for the English at Agra. They were at open war with the Portuguese: they had quarrelled with the Moghul's officers at Surat: the Moghul's officers confused them with the Dutch and punished them for their rivals' aggressions. Worst of all, in 1619 English ships had captured a "frigate" belonging to natives, on the pretence that it was a Portuguese vessel. Retribution overtook them in 1621 when the true owners complained to Jahangir, and to Asaf Khan brother of Jahangir's wife Nur Jahan. The latter wearied by the complainants' importunities, ceased to help his English protégés; Hughes and Parker were imprisoned in Agra Fort, their goods sequestered, and a sum of £10,200 recovered from them. In May 1621 the factory was broken up, to be reopened, with Offley, Willoughby, Goodwin and Bangham, in 1624. We find Offley at the head of the factors there from 1625 to 7: he was recalled and succeeded by Gregory Clement, afterwards a notorious regicide.

So the factory went on. As a trade concern, for various reasons it was never over-prosperous; its importance lay in its presence at the headquarters of the Moghul Government. But when this shifted to Delhi, its reason for existing ceased. As early as 1655, orders are found from the company to recall the factors (Jesson was there at the time), sell the horses, plate, &c., but to keep the house. In 1656, Jesson was still there, though "long since sent for", according to a letter of the factors: and the company "presume" that the Agra and other up-country factors have been withdrawn. But in 1657 we read that Jesson was still there, as "his engagements" did not allow him to depart. In 1660, the company express a hope that the Agra factory has not been started again: and in 1661, the Surat factors writing to the company mention its dissolution by the latter, meaning apparently a second dissolution of the factory, if by any chance it had been resettled—the words are "you having dissolved the factories of Agra and Ahmadabad, though in the former place we had settled none." Bernier writing in 1663 says the English had abandoned their factory which fixes a limit date: and though Manucci speaks of English factors at Agra taking part in events which other evidence shows should be referred to the year 1661, he is extremely inaccurate in his dates, and his chance mention of English factors, at this time, proves nothing. (For these events cf. no. 195.) At some time between 1657 and 1660, therefore, the factory came to an end altogether. Eight years later Charles II handed over Bombay to the company, and for the first time, the British owned a portion of India.

B.—The Dutch factory at Agra.—The Dutch first settled at Surat in 1616, under the leadership of Van der Broecke. About 10 years before (according to Roe, but the date is uncertain), certain Dutch merchants at different times had tried to settle there but, for various reasons, without success. In 1616 Roe, who was struggling on behalf of his compatriots with Moghul intrigue, was not likely to relish added trouble in the shape of Dutch rivalry, and did his best to poison the ear of Asaf Khan and Khurram against them.—"more ingeniously than ingenuously" as Mr. Foster remarks. His efforts were only partially successful, for they were allowed to land some factors and merchandize. Next year the Dutch ships were wrecked near Surat, and Roe advised that all assistance should be refused them. But in 1618 Van Ravesteyn headed a Dutch embassy which obtained concessions from Jahangir "upon as good terms almost as wee" as Roe writes. There was bitter rivalry, bitter dislike, and to a large extent, bitter misrepresentation, at work between the Dutch and English at this time. Roe accused them of covering piracy with the English flag, a fact probably untrue and certainly denied, but widely believed. Their proceedings were high-handed enough in all conscience: they captured French, Danish, Portuguese and native ships indifferently. Used to the petty princelings of the Spice Islands, they treated the Great Moghul to the same audacious proceedings, and it took them time to learn that there was a vast difference between Jahangir and the potentates of Java and Sumatra. They settled in Agra in 1621, though their factors had paid flying visits there before. Their first head was Wouter (or Walter) Heuten. He died in 1623, and was followed by Francis Pelsart, who at a later date was shipwrecked, according to Thevenot, off Australia. English and Dutch factors lived together on good terms, so long as the new-comers were weak: but when their competition became serious, they quickly fell out. Thevenot has a letter (dated 1627) from Pelsart to the Dutch East India Company, which contains a curious description of Agra, but is chiefly noticeable for its jealousy of English trade successes. In 1628 the English records show that the rivals were not on speaking terms, which was natural enough, in view of the massacre of Amboyna (1623) and its results. None the less, it is pleasing to note that the Dutch never carried resentment beyond the grave; and on at least two occasions offered their deceased rivals the last hospitality of sepulture. Both Offley and Drake were buried by them (nos. 190-191). Manucci mentions Jan Tack (no. 195); and a letter is extant, dated 1664, from the Dutch Company to their Government in which the Agra factory is mentioned. It is to be found in Thevenot. Bernier, writing in 1663, mentions the Dutch factory as having generally four or five factors: but their trade was not then very lucrative owing, he thinks, to Armenian competition, and the distance between Agra and Surat. But he considered it, at the time, unlikely that they would abandon the factory, as it was useful to have persons at court to look after their interests. But even at this time Agra was beginning to give place to Delhi, and very possibly it was the removal of the court from Agra to Delhi which determined the Dutch to close their factory. When exactly the factory was closed is not known. Tieffentaller, writing presumably about 1750, says it had fallen into ruins; and probably it was closed soon after 1679, the date of the last tomb. Of the three factors, —de Boeck, assistant, Tack, leading merchant, and deLiem, accountant—we know nothing, save a solitary fact recorded by Manucci about Tack.

C.—Site of the old tombs.—All the old tombs nos. 190-196, with three others that bear no inscription, are on a large sandstone platform. They were found underground in 1854, when the foundations of St. Paul's Church, close by, were being dug, and were placed in the cemetery on a platform. In 1875 the Agra Archaeological Society's transactions mentions them as on a platform at the south side of the church; and about the same time it would appear from information received from Mr. Fanthome, that Mr. A. Thomson, principal of Agra college, for some reason or another had them put up on another (the present) platform.

From the story of Drake's death (no. 191), we find that these tombs—Drake's for certain and probably all the others—originally stood in the garden of the Dutch factory. It was the only piece of ground they owned in India; and the English themselves had no such garden in Agra, though they had elsewhere. As heretics, they could not be buried in the Roman Catholic cemetery; and it was natural that they should inter the members of their community who died in their garden. When the Dutch had to perform the last rites for their English rivals, they would naturally bury them there also. It would appear therefore that St. Paul's stands on the site of this old Dutch garden; so that the soil has remained purely European.

Of the nameless tombstones, one may be that of Wouter or Walter Heuten, chief of the Dutch factory, who died in 1623.

- 190.—1627—OFLEY, J. Inscription:—Here lies the body of Justinian Ofley who was chief merchant in Agra for the English. He deceased the 18th April 1627.

[Justinian Ofley, or Ofley was the son of Thomas Ofley merchant, of London. He arrived in India in 1620. In March 1621 he was sent to Broach, and then on to Baroda, where he was very ill, a fact which he attributed to the "air and bad water." In 1622, he went with other factors to Burhanpur and was there till May or June, when the troubles with the Emperor Jahangir at Agra forced the settlement to be abandoned, as was that of Agra itself. Ofley in November was back at Broach and remained there till, at all events, October 1623. In that month he is found at Variao; in November it was decided to reopen the factory at Agra, and send Robert Young, Ofley and Goodwin there—"to obtayne the King's firman, to ratifie and confirme the contracts concluded on with Cosrooe the young Prince" and to sell "sundrye goods and jewells." After a visit to Surat, he and Goodwin are found writing from Baroda on Christmas day 1623. There appears to be no further mention of him till December 1625, when he is at Agra; and in 1626, he is found there, with several others, as chief factor. In 1627, Ofley incurred the displeasure of his superiors at Surat—what the precise reason was is not clear, but it was apparently due to some friction with John Bangham, another factor who was in residence (chiefly) at the court, and had been ordered to go to Agra: at all events, we learn that the Surat Council were "mightily incensed against Bangham and still more against Ofley" in December 1626; whilst in February 1627 the same writer (Joseph Hopkinson at Ahmadabad writing to Bangham) says that Ofley's proceedings "were so hardly thought of that he will have need of a very sound and substantial apology for himself, on arrival." He was to be succeeded by the notorious Gregory Clement, later one of the Regicides, excluded from the Restoration amnesty and executed in 1660. But Ofley died in April, before Clement arrived there. "Whilst I was in Cambaia (writes Kerridge to the company) letters came unto me from Agra importing Justinian Ofleyes decease, who departed this life after a lingering sickness, the 18th of April last; and no other English being there" (they were all away with caravans) "was buried by the Dutch"; and we then get a hint of the cause of the Council's anger against him: "his accounts are so imperfect that more than all we feare will not cleare them." His pay, it is stated in 1622, was R 104 pice 43 for the year.]

- 191.—1637—DRAKE, J. Inscription:—Here lyes the body of John Drake.....[s] lane..... anno domini.....1637. E. K. fecit A.....Domin.....1647.

[John Drake's death occurred in a riot, between some villagers and a caravan of indigo of which he was in charge. He had been warned not to set out, because of the occurrence of the Holi festival which is described as "resembling the carnival". "At a village, called Paechuchra, four coorse (hor) beyond Dholpur.....the gowars (ganwars) demanded rahdares, or, as we say, "toll" of the party." With John Drake, were Dhanji, the English broker at Agra, and his son

Morar Das. Dhanji pointed out that their farmans exempted them from toll; and they let all the carts pass but two, which were guarded by four peons, which they stopped; and endeavoured, also, to disarm these men. This adds weight to the statement of some of those who wrote to the Surat factors on the subject, that the subsequent riot was caused by the abuse indulged in by the peons: it is just precisely what, in the circumstances, the peons might have been expected to do. The peons resisted the attempt to disarm them, whereupon, the villagers were reinforced by 800 others, variously armed, and a fight ensued. It is stated that "the gowars made a hooobub." The villagers carried off Dhanji to the village: John Drake and Morar Das were ahead and returned, but were surrounded by the villagers. Drake set spurs to his horse and broke through them: the fight began again and he was shot through with an arrow. This ended the fight: the peons were rifled, but not the carts; and when Drake was found to be seriously hurt, the villagers did all they could to assist. A surgeon was sent from Agra by Da Castro, the Jesuit rector; but his help was in vain. Drake desired to be moved to Agra, but died at Dholpur, on the 5th March.

The matter was reported to the Surat factors by, amongst others, Jeronimo Veronio (vide no. 110) and Father daCastro (no. 83.) The Dutch buried him as there was no other English factor in Agra. The map still shows a village called Pachokhra near the spot referred to above. By the irony of fate, on March 10th, within a day or two of Drake's burial, the company in London decided to raise his salary from £ 20 to £60 per annum, in recognition of his eight years of faithful service. E. K. is probably, Edward Knipe, a factor].

[Mr. Foster informs me that no account of Purchas' death has yet been found in the India office records. The only three mentions of him up to January 1652 are these:—(O. C. 2189) 19th December 1650. "List of factors at Surat and subordinate factories..... George Purchas, Agra and Lucknow." In O. C. 2204 on the 31st January 1650—1, he is mentioned in a letter from the Surat General to the company, as follows. "Two more there are at Agra and Lucknow to wit Verity Roydon and George Purchas; the former came forth stewards mate on shipp Eagle, the other on your shipp Blessing, the same year, a very civill and industerous youth..... and see well deserving that wee hope you will alsoe bee pleased to consider there past service by making them competent sallaryes from the tyme that these your last ships arrived"..... In April of the same year (O. C. 2216), there is another letter which refers to the one already quoted and presses the company "that they may not escape your consideration." The Eagle arrived in Swally Road in September 1649; and as the Blessing arrived the same year, on the most liberal interpretation, Purchas had had no more than 2 years' service, and may have had as little as eighteen months.]

- 238.—1856—DRUMMOND, F. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Frederick, eldest son of Hon'ble Robert and Anne Drummond. He was born December 22nd, 1855, and died at Agra, September 21st, 1856.

[R. Drummond was Magistrate at Agra during the Mutiny. His views were not approved by many of his superiors, but he was a strong man and rendered invaluable services in spite of mistakes. The Mutiny Narrative states "with all his admirable qualities, and all his energy and indefatigable activity, by administrative experience his views were regarded as wrong, and cordial co-operation being most essential at such a juncture in carrying out new arrangements it was perhaps better for the public service and more pleasant to him, that their execution should be entrusted to other hands." He retired in 1877 and died in 1887.

Robert Andrew John Drummond (1820—1887), was the 5th son of the 8th Viscount Strathallan, a title that had been in abeyance since Culloden, and is now merged in the Earldom of Perth. The history of the family is extremely complicated; it is of Hungarian origin and dates back to the time of Edgar Atheling and Margaret, his sister, wife of Malcolm III. of Scotland. The Lordship of Drummond dates to 1487, the Earldom of Perth to 1606, the Earldom and Dukedom of Melfort (the latter honour is French) to 1686 and 1692, and the Viscounty of Strathallan also to 1686. The Strathallan branch of the Drummonds are descended from the 2nd son of the 2nd Lord Drummond. His wife Anna Maria, was daughter of Compton Reade and died 1871. They had 9 sons and a daughter; the 2nd was born just before the Mutiny.]

Also of his brother, the Reverend A. R. Hubbard, Esq., B.A., of the Dehli Mission, who was killed at Delhi, May 11th, 1857, aged 33 years.

[Mr. F. C. Hubbard was Professor of Literature at Agra College. On his way from the Fort to the College he was fired on by the Police at the Kale Khan Darwaza Chauki, wounded, followed and killed. For his brother see no. 469.]

- 242.—1857—SANDFORD, S. Mrs. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Sussanna, relict of the late E. M. Sandford, Esq., indigo planter of Maharaajgunje, Behar, died at Agra, 3rd May 1857, aged 75 years.

- 243.—1858—COLESTON, L. B., Mrs. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Louisa Broughton the beloved wife of Samuel Coleston, who having survived the loss of 3 infant daughters and 1 son departed this life in humble dependance upon her Saviour Jesus Christ on the 14th January 1858, aged 23 years 5 months and 12 days. During the Mutiny and rebellion of 1857, she took ill in the Agra Fort whence she was removed to a place close by for recovery, but alas, after two months' ailment, died in the prime of life, leaving a dear infant daughter of nine months' old and a bereaved husband to bemoan a sad and heart-rending separation...

- 244.—1858—BURROWES, E. D., Miss. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Emma Dorothy, daughter of Charles James and Mary Burrowes who departed this life on the 4th February 1858 in her 22nd year.

- 245.—1858—DUDRENEC, W. P. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of William Patrick Dudrenec, died in the Agra Fort, 10th May 1858, aged 32 years and 4 months.

[Yet another instance of a name celebrated among the military adventurers of the Maratha period. Agra alone contains tombs to men or the descendants of men as well known as Reinhardt, Perron, Filze, Gardner, Pedron, Hensing, Derridon and Dudrenec; elsewhere we shall find Sutherland, Dyes, Hearsay and others. The name is in this case sufficiently uncommon to warrant the supposition that there is a connexion between the famous Chevalier Dudrenec and this tomb. Chevalier Dudrenec was a native of Brest, a Broton as his name shows, a gentleman of refinement and education, as is generally agreed. He had a most varied career, and served no less than seven masters, including the Begam Samru, Tukaji Holkar, Amir Khan, Hakwa Dada and Perron. He was a most unfortunate commander, and lost several important battles. His notions of loyalty were also not above question. Nevertheless encomiums have been passed on him, and for good as well as for evil there can be no smoke without fire. One thing is certain : he was a gentleman, and gentlemen were rare among the military adventurers. DeBoigne, Dudrenec, Skinner, Gardner and Hearsay were so, but it might be difficult to find another.]

- 246.—1859—STURT, M., Mrs. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Madelaine, relict of the late Richard Roche Sturt, Esq., Bengal Civil Service, who departed this life at Agra on the 19th August 1859, deeply regretted, aged 51 years. This monument is erected by her children.

[This would appear to be Richard Roche Sturt, the seventh son of T. L. N. Sturt, H. E. I. C. S., and Puisne Judge, who joined the service in 1827 and died in 1854. He is said to have married Mary, the daughter of Colonel Whish, who died sine prole, so that this must have been a second wife, not recorded. His elder brother (Sir) Charles Sturt, K.C.M.G., was the Australian explorer. Several of the Sturts have served in India. The family is also connected with Lord Alington.]

He was the son of Lieutenant Colonel Craigie, H. E. I. C. S., and nephew of John Thornhill (father of R. B. Thornhill, No. 385), who nominated him. He was educated at Richmond and Haileybury.]

[These are undoubtedly descendants of Major Louis Derridon, a half-bred Frenchman, and related by marriage to both Perron and Hessian (cf. no. 182). He commanded one of Hessian's battalions and was wounded and taken prisoner at the battle of Ujjain. He was at Agra when the English took it in 1803. In 1898 he is mentioned as living at Koil by Lady Fanny Parkes. His grandson owned this property as late as 1871. In the Mutiny at Agra a Mr. and Mrs. Derridon and two children were killed, whilst Mr. Humphries, I.C.S., has told me that when he was at Aligarh (1900-1) a Derridon appeared in his court as witness in a case.]

- 256.—1857—LAMB, J. H., Lieutenant. Inscription :—In memory of John Henderson Lamb, Lieutenant of the Bengal Artillery, died on the 24th August 1857, of wounds received in action on the 5th July 1857.

"Death swallowed up in victory."

[The action of the 5th July 1857 was the battle of Sacheta or Shahganj, in which Brigadier Polwhele with 600 men attacked 5,000 rebels. The rebels were driven back but the ammunition ran short, and Polwhele was compelled to retreat, hotly pursued by the enemy's cavalry. It was a disastrous affair, and Polwhele was superseded shortly after.]

Mr. Lamb was the son of D. Lamb, merchant, born at Liverpool in 1827. He was Lieutenant Pearson's subaltern. He was wounded by a grapeshot in his right thigh. "One of his guns was dismantled, but though exposed to a heavy fire and rushes of cavalry, he went to work to remount it as coolly as if it had been a practice with blank cartridge."]

In memory of Jean Charles Jourdan, born on 10th March 1818 at Mans, France, died at Agra on the field of battle on the 5th July 1857. R. I. P.

[The Agra Militia Cavalry, raised by Raikes and commanded by Major Prendergast, were the usual medley of officers without regiments, civilians, clerks, infantry privates who could ride, pensioners, planters, &c., &c. But to this list had to be added the equestrians of a wandering French circus. Of these M. Jourdan was the chief. He said he went out to fight pour l'honneur de l'alliance; and proved his sincerity by his death at Shahganj (Sacheta). Other foreigners fought for us at Lucknow and elsewhere—Geoffroi, Deprat, Barsotelli; and one and all proved allies above the average of bravery. This wandering circus master was not the least brave of them.]

[Doubtless son of the above.]

- 259.—1857—WATSON, W. C., B.C.S. Inscription:—"Sacred to the memory of William Christian Watson of the Bengal Civil Service, second son of the late Colonel Thomas Colclough Watson, who died of cholera in the fort of Agra on the 12th of July 1857, aged 32 years and 6 months.

"They shall hunger no more: neither thirst any more: neither shall the sun light on them or any heat."

[Mr. Watson was Magistrate of Aligarh during the Mutiny. Assisted by a troop of volunteer horse raised by Mr. Saunders, an indigo planter, he held out till the 5th July. During this time he and his men kept up a regular patrol in disaffected villages and kept them in check. About the beginning of June the troop was recalled to Agra but 10 men held out at Mandrak, a planter's house 6 miles from Koil, whence they kept communications open and watched the Gwalior troops at Hathras. On the 2nd July whilst the twelve men (Watson, young Outram, Sir J. Outram's son, and their ten volunteers) were at dinner they were attacked by several hundred rabble. They left their meal and charged and defeated them, and went back to dinner. But as soon as the Gwalior troops rose they had to go, and rode in to Agra in time to fight at Shahganj on the 5th July. Watson, who was of weak physique, was killed by his exertions. His operations in Aligarh are peculiarly interesting, as showing the value of a small force of volunteers so long as they have only rabble to contend with.]

"Moria" should be "Moiria." He was the son of Colonel Burlton, B. N. C., born in India in 1820. It is recorded that he was greatly beloved by his men, who escorted him from Gwalior to Agra and then left him. He was at Addiscombe 1835-6. He died of cholera on the 18th July.]

[The date should be 1857, not 1858; it is the date of the battle of Sachota. Major Thomas was the son of General L. Thomas and was born in India in 1808. He was assistant in the Thagi department in 1835 and in civil employ in the Central Provinces from 1835 to 1840. [The name is really Candy. He was ensign in 1823 and lieutenant in 1825, the son of R. Candy, born at E. Knoyle in 1803. A puzzling inscription. [This inscription contains a curious error. I could not trace this officer till I found him by chance in the E. I. Register and Vibart. He died not in 1830, but in 1850; and either the sculptor cut a 3 for a 5 in the date, or omitted some words giving the date of birth which was in 1830. - 342.—1857—D'OYLY, E. A. C., Captain. Inscription :—The dying request of him who lies beneath this stone, Edward Armstrong Carrie D'Oyly, Captain of Bengal Artillery, who was mortally wounded whilst commanding his battery in the action against the mutineers on the 5th of July 1857 and died in the fort of Agra on the following day, than whom no more gallant soldier or true-hearted man ever gloriously fell on the battle field, whose last words were—"Lay a stone over my grave and say I died fighting my guns"—is thus fulfilled.

[For the battle of Sacheta or Shahganj see no. 256. D'Oyly fought his guns so long as his ammunition lasted. The loss was most severe, for he was all that this epitaph says of him. He was "one whose dying moments Florence Nightingale herself might have been proud to soothe." His last spoken words were those recorded on the stone. He was at Addiscombe from 1840-41 and was

34 at his death. His brother T. D'Oyly was also in the Bengal artillery. He was the son of Captain D'Oyly, Bengal artillery.]

- 343.—1857—FRENCH, L. J., Captain. Inscription :—In memory of Captain Lucius John French, 9th Queen's Royal Lancers, who fell in action near this spot, October 10th 1857.

[The so-called battle of Agra was a discreditable affair. Greatedh's column from Delhi arrived at Agra on the morning of the 10th. Colonel Cotton had withdrawn his vedettes and patrols ; and civil authorities, who warned him that the enemy were closer than he thought were snubbed. Greatedh accepted what he was told without question and himself posted no piquets, encamping his force on the parade-ground. The men lay down to sleep. They were suddenly attacked. But it was impossible to take soldiers like these by surprise. An officer galloped off for Greatedh at the fort ; independent fights were going on all over the parade-ground. "Here a couple of cavalry soldiers were charging each other. There the game of bayonet versus sword was being carried on in real earnest. Further on a party of the enemy's Cavalry were attacking one of Blunt's guns Just in front, the 75th Foot (many of the men in their shirt sleeves) were forming square to receive a body of the rebel horse. A little to the left of the 76th Remington's troops of horse artillery and Bourchier's battery had opened fire from the park without waiting to put on their accoutrements still further to the left, the 9th Lancers and Gough's squadron of Hodson's Horse were rapidly saddling and falling in ; on the right the 8th Foot and the 2nd and 4th Punjab Infantry were busy getting under arms, while beyond the three squadrons of Punjab Cavalry under Probyn and Younghusband were hurrying to get on the enemy's flank.

The enemy were gradually driven back, when Greatedh appeared on the scene. The 9th Lancers made a series of brilliant charges, one troop recaptured Blunt's captured gun—the Captain (French) was there killed. He had already distinguished himself at Delhi.

The battle is remarkable, apart from its extraordinary nature—if ever a British force "muddled through" it was at Agra—for the number of officers of repute who were then young subalterns that took part in this hand-to-hand affairs. Sir Dighton Probyn, Lord Roberts, Sir John Watson, Sir Hugh Gough, all fought there ; the former won his V. C. for capturing a standard, and Lord Roberts was nearly killed, being saved by a trooper of the 9th Lancers. Sir George Campbell also took part in the fight and captured several guns—an incident fully described in his memoirs.]

AGRA FORT.

- 349.—1857—COLVIN, J. R., B.C.S. Inscription:—In memory of John Russel Colvin born May 29th 1807, died in this fort, September 9th 1857, Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces, India.

[J. R. Colvin was of mixed Scotch and Irish descent. His grandfather was a Shropshire merchant, his grandmother, the daughter of a North Ireland clergyman. Their son, Alexander, founded a business (Colvin, Ainslie and Cowie) in India in 1778. He died in 1818, and a monument erected by his brother merchants to his memory is in St. John's, the Calcutta Parish Church. He is buried in the South Park Street Cemetery. His younger brother, James, joined his brother early in the eighties and married in 1802, Maria, daughter, of William Jackson, attorney to the Company and "Registrar" of the Supreme Court. Their fourth son was J. R. Colvin.

He was educated in private schools at St. Andrews and subsequently (1819) at St. Andrew's University; and in 1823 he entered Haileybury. In 1825 he sailed for India; for a few months he was at the Fort William College and before the end of 1826 became an Assistant Registrar in the Chief Court of Appeal. He was subsequently Assistant at Cuttack and in Hyderabad. For four years (1831—35) he was in both judicial and revenue departments of the secretariat successively as Assistant and Deputy Secretary and Secretary. For the next six years he was Lord Auckland's Private Secretary and as such is said to have had considerable influence on his Afghan policy, which ended in the Kabul expedition of 1839. He was subsequently Resident in Nepal (1845) after three years furlough, Commissioner of Tenasserim in 1846, Judge of the Calcutta High Court and Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces from 1853. His policy was mainly directed to reforms in the judiciary and police, and to the re-settlement of the land revenue.

The Mutiny broke out when Mr. Colvin was at Agra. The anxiety proved too much for his health, and he died in the fort, where he is buried. Controversy rages round two parts of his career: his connexion with the Afghan War, and his policy during the Mutiny. Sir Auckland Colvin has exhausted the subject in his life of his father, and those who wish to go deeper into the matter should consult it. This is no place for such a discussion. Whatever his errors, there can be no doubt that "he gave up his life for his country as much as if he had fallen on the battle-field." His death was due to his persistence in continuous mental labour when his health demanded complete repose. To his qualities—his gentleness, forbearance and energy, his administrative ability and devotion to duty—even his critics bear witness. Almost his last words were "Nec patriam antiquam nunc est spes ulla videndi."

He married in 1827, Emma Sophia, daughter of the Reverend Wetenhall Sneyd in Calcutta. Of his sons, Sir Auckland Colvin was also Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh (1887—1892) and another son, Sir W. M. Colvin (died 1908) was a well-known barrister in practice at Allahabad.]

- 350.—1908—STRACHEY, J., Sir. Inscription:—In grateful commemoration of services rendered to posterity by the Hon'ble

Sir John Strachey, G.C.S.I., to whom, not forgetting the enlightened sympathy and timely care of others, India is mainly indebted for the rescued and preserved beauty of the Taj Mahal and other famous monuments of the ancient art and history of these Provinces formerly administered by him. This tablet is placed by order of his friend, the Earl of Lytton, Viceroy and Governor-General of India, A. D. 1880.

[This tablet is not a memorial of Sir John Strachey, but in commemoration of his work. He died, however, in 1908 and this has been inserted here in consequence. Sir John Strachey, G.C.S.I., was born in 1828, the son of Edward Strachey, B.C.S. He was educated at Haileybury and went out to India in 1849. The chief posts he held were President of a Commission to inquire into the cholera epidemic of 1881: Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces in 1862: President of the Sanitary Commission in 1864: officiating Chief Commissioner of Oudh in 1866-67: Member of the Governor General's Supreme Council from 1868 to 1872: acting as Governor General during the interregnum after the death of Lord Mayo for a few days: Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces from April 1874 to December 1876: Financial Member of the Supreme Council from 1876 to 1880: Member of the Council of India from 1885 to 1895. His works are "Hastings and the Rohilla War," 1892; "India, its Administration and Progress," 1903: and with Lieutenant-General Sir Richard Strachey, G.C.S.I., his elder brother, "the Finance and Public Works of India 1869-1881," in 1882. He was made K.C.S.I., in 1873, and G.C.S.I., in 1878. His son, Sir Arthur Strachey (died 1901) was Chief Justice, Allahabad, High Court, from 1899 to 1901.

The Strachey family is very ancient and has moreover been connected with India since the time of Clive. It traces its tree back as far as William Strachey of Saffron Walden born in 1493. The first baronet, Sir Henry (1737-1810) was Secretary to Lord Clive in 1764 and held other posts under Government, both at home and abroad. Edward Strachey, his second son, was in the B.C.S. His sons were Sir Edward, 3rd baronet, Henry (a Colonel in the Bengal Army), Sir Richard and Sir John (vide above) and George, formerly British Minister at the Saxon Court. Sir John Strachey married Katherine Jane, daughter of G. Batten, B.C.S. Besides Sir Arthur Strachey, mentioned above, another son was a Lieutenant-Colonel in the Indian Army; other members of the family have also served or been connected with India. The present (4th) baronet Sir Edward Strachey is M. P. for S. Somerset.]

He died in consequence of a wound he received when leading on the troops and was interred here on the 25th of November 1804, in the 40th year of his age. The Army lament his loss with the deepest sorrow; his country regards his heroic conduct with grateful admiration. History will record his fame and perpetuate the glory of his illustrious deed.

[General Frazer's force consisted of the 76th, the Company's European Regiment and 6 battalions of sepoys. Holkar's troops were strongly posted but a succession of bayonet charges turned them out of their positions. "They charged one battery after another for 2 miles." Frazer's leg was shot off early in the engagement. He was removed to Muttra but died shortly after. "He was an able and brave soldier, and a worthy member of society: so that the whole army sincerely mourned his loss." Wellesley wrote to the Directors as follows: "The Governor General in Council laments with the deepest concern the irreparable loss of that gallant and distinguished officer Major-General Frazer, to whose eminent judgment and military skill and exemplary valour is principally to be ascribed the signal success of the British arms on this memorable occasion." SUTHERLAND GARDENS.

- 367.—1801—(1) SUTHERLAND, C. P. 1804—(2) SUTHERLAND, R., Colonel. Inscription :—In memory of Robert Sutherland, Colonel in Maharaja Daulat Rao Sindhia's Service, who departed this life on the 20th July 1804, aged 36 years. Also in remembrance of his son, C. P. Sutherland (a very promising youth), who died at Hindia, on the 14th of October 1801, aged 3 years.

[Originally an officer in the 73rd, from which he was cashiered, Col. Sutherland entered Sindhia's service in De Boigne's 1st Brigade in 1790. Soon after 1794 he obtained command of the 3rd and then of the 2nd Brigade. At De Boigne's retirement he was senior officer in Hindustan and hoped to succeed him : but Perron had Sindhia's ear and obtained the appointment for himself. He saw service in command in Bundelkhand in 1796 : but shortly afterwards was dismissed for intriguing with rebellious chiefs. In 1799 he was restored through the influence of his father-in-law, John Hession, and became commander of the 1st Brigade. In 1801 he won the important victory of Indore over Holkar's troops. In 1802 as the result of an unsuccessful intrigue against Perron, he resigned his commission. He was in Agra in a private capacity when Lake besieged it (not as Keene says in his "Handbook to Agra" as commander) : but the troops after imprisoning him and other Europeans sent him as an envoy to Lake to ask for terms. He passed over to the British and was given a pension of Rs. 800 a month. He had, so far as is known, two sons, of whom one is buried with him. His wife appears to have been Magdalene, daughter of John Hensing (cf. no. 145.)]

- 368.—1857—BURLTON, P. H. C., Lieutenant. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Lieutenant P. H. C. Burlton, 67th Native Infantry, who was shot by a detachment of his regiment and of the 41st Native Infantry near this spot on the 30th May 1857. This tomb is erected by his brother officers.

[Two companies—one of the 44th and one of the 67th N. I.—were sent from Agra to relieve a company of the 67th who were at Muttra. The relieved company was to escort the treasure to Agra. The treasure was packed in carts: and as soon as Mr. Burlton gave the order to march, the guard mutinied and shot him.

The Mutiny Narrative, Rice-Holmes and Raikes, give slightly different accounts of the incident, which leave it uncertain whether all three companies mutinied, or one or more of them, and if so which; nor is it clear to which company Mr. Burlton belonged. Probably all three companies rose: and as Mr. Burlton was to march with the relieved company, in all probability he belonged to them.

[41st in the epitaph is a mistake for 44th. The 41st were at Sitapur, the 44th at Agra.]

It was this brigade that won the battle of Bhitaura in 1794. This no doubt explains the above entries. This name is Edward Clayton, not Claydon. He was appointed cadet in 1778 and captain in 1796.]

- 377.—1832—CAMPBELL, C. H., Major. Inscription:—(Destroyed.)

[Charles Hay Campbell was third son of the late William Campbell of Fairfield, N. B. He entered the Bengal Artillery in 1805. He served under Lord Lake, and in 1810 was Adjutant, and then quartermaster of his Corps. He also served on the staff in many posts, as Deputy Secretary in the Military Department (1819), in charge of the Cossipur Gun Factory (1821), and then of the similar factory at Fatehgarh. He wrote on professional subjects, specially on "Sieges in Bengal" in the British Indian Military Repository. He died at Fatehgarh on the 19th May 1832. The inscription was destroyed in the Mutiny.

The B. O., curiously enough, frequently omits to give the inscription when it gives a biography; and this is such a case. Major C. H. Campbell married (1824) Jane Wemyss, daughter of the Honourable L. Keith Murray, and granddaughter of the 4th Earl of Dunmore. By her he had 3 sons and 3 daughters: the eldest is still alive (or was in 1906) and is the head of the family. For another vide No. 286. All 3 sons were in the Indian Army, all 3 daughters married officers in it—two of them in the same regiment. Four of Major Campbell's brothers also served in India, as well as a grandson and a great grandson, also Charles Hay, now in the Guides. The family is a branch of the Campbells of Auchmannoch, co. Ayr, who have been landowners there for several centuries.]

[The garrison at Fatehgarh consisted of the 10th N. I. The inhabitants were largely turbulent Muhammadans. The 10th were supposed to be faithful by their officers; their faithfulness extended so far that they said that whilst they themselves would not murder their officers, if another corps killed them, "it was not their fault." As the Lieutenant-Governor wrote "they were faithful in a peculiar way, and masters of the situation." When some mutineers (Oudh Irregulars) arrived, they received and made much of them. It was then that about 140 Europeans left in boats, who were joined later by four officers of the 10th N. I. They reported that on parade the sepoys had fired at their officers who had escaped to the fort: these four had been unable to do so.

These boats came under a heavy fire at Khoosumkhor. Shortly after some 40 went up to a fort of Hardeo Bakhsh's at Dharampur. The rest went on down the river. Meantime Mr. Probyn and two of the four officers returned to Fatehgarh. They found that the regiment had mutinied: they had fired on their officers and insisted on the treasure being taken from the fort to their lines. They had been pacified with two months' pay in advance and a promise of six month's batta; and they were then pronounced faithful and staunch. Mr. Probyn returned to Dharampur. Everybody there was dissatisfied with the place: and on a letter being received from Colonel Smith, all but Mr. Probyn and family and Mr. Edwards of Budaun, returned to the Fort. The Sitapur mutineers arrived two or three days later and on the 18th, the 10th mutinied. The Nawab was put on the gaddi; and the siege of the fort began. The fort was not defensible: there were only two guns, and a few model guns not mounted on the walls, the fort was out of repair and there was little ammunition. For nine days it was bravely defended, Colonel Tucker being among the slain. He was shot through a loop hole whilst looking out to see the effect of his last shot. On the 3rd July the fort was evacuated, and the party went off in boats, fired on most of the way. At Singirampur one boat grounded: a heavy fire was opened, and the passengers jumped overboard; they were all killed or taken prisoners except three. Others were also killed in another of the boats. They eventually reached Cawnpore only to be there murdered by the Nana.

Of those that left on the 4th June, those that did not branch off to Dharampur were made prisoners, taken to Cawnpore and there murdered.

The following list shows all the inhabitants of Fatehgarh and where and how they were murdered :—

Killed in the Fort :—Colonel Tucker, Mr. J. M. Jones, Conductor Ahern.

Philip Monckton (vide No. 808) was an uncle of Lieutenant J. R. Monckton ; and an account of the family will be found there. His wife was Rose Catherine, daughter of Thomas Taylor.

387.—1803—GUTHRIE, J., Lieut-Colonel. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Lieutenant-Colonel John Guthrie of Kilmarnock in Scotland, a Peer of the Mogul Empire. He was born the 6th of March 1749, and departed this life on the 18th October, in consequence of a wound received at the assault on the Fort of Tateeah 30th September 1803.

[In 1801, when Fatehgarh was ceded to the British, the change was resented by the Raja of Thatia, and in 1803 he rebelled. His fort was besieged and taken by a force under Colonel Guthrie. He was appointed cadet in 1771, ensign 1773 ; captain 1784 and Lieutenant-Colonel 1800. The date of birth is possibly wrong and a cadet was more likely to be appointed at 12 years old than at 22 in those days. He was the officer who gave his name to the present 3rd Brahmans (Guthrie ki paltan) whom he led into their first engagement at Thatia : at this time it was the 1st battalion 16th N. I.]

This stone is placed here in affectionate remembrance of his brother by J. Fayrer, M.D., Surgeon, Bengal Army.

[Captain Fletcher Hayes, (cf. no. 391) Military Secretary to Sir H. Lawrence was sent to Cawnpore with 240 men of the Oude Irregular Cavalry under Lieutenant Barbor (No. 390) in answer to a request for aid from Sir H. Wheeler, Mr. Fayrer (a brother of Sir Joseph Fayrer) went with the force as a volunteer. Finding all quiet at Cawnpore he suggested to Sir Henry that he should use his troops to keep the communications northwards open, along the Grand Trunk Road. He left his men 8 miles from Mainpuri and rode with Lieutenant Carey to consult the Magistrate. On their return, some native officers met them and urged them to fly. They did so but were pursued and Hayes, who was badly mounted, was cut down; Carey escaped. Fayrer had already been cut down from behind whilst drinking at a well, and Barbor was killed in trying to escape. Fayrer (born 1833, son of Commander Fayrer R. N. of Milnthorpe, Westmoreland,) had been a cadet in the Australian Mounted Police and was a young man of great promise. Hayes was an Oxford graduate, an oriental scholar of distinction, an able and skilful diplomatist, a man "of great ability, rare courage and unbounded ambition."]

J. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Charles James Doyle, who fell leading a small band against overwhelming numbers of savage foes at the battle of Harchandpore, December 8th, 1858. True-hearted, generous and gentle as he was brave. His companion in arms have erected this tablet in remembrance of their lost friend ; thankful amid their grief that he died as became a Christian hero ; fighting only in his country's cause, beloved and respected by all his comrades and at peace with God.

[The engagement of Harchandpur occurred about a month after the district was supposed to be pacified. A body of Oudh mutineers entered Etawah and plundered indiscriminately. They were severely defeated by the local levies : Mr. Doyle (he was a volunteer civilian, not a soldier) was in command of the cavalry, consisting of the Etawah Light Horse and the 13th troop of Police Cavalry. After killing two men he was dismounted and cut to pieces.]

- 395.—1828—GARDNER, A. Inscription :—Alan Gardner died XXX January 1828.

[This is the only inscription in a very handsome marble mausoleum, containing however several other tombs of the Gardner family.]

Alan Gardner was the son of Col. William Linnaeus Gardner (1770—1835), nephew of Alan, first Lord Gardner, a distinguished admiral. He was in the service of Jaswant Rao Holkar (1798), but left it because of an affront to his wife, who was a Muhammadan princess, daughter of the Beg of Cambay, by name Mahr Manzul-un-nissa Begam. In 1804 he raised for the British Government the regiment known as Gardner's Horse. In 1815 he raised a force of irregulars and assisted in the reduction of Almora and Kumaun, where another relative, the Hon'ble E. Gardner was Resident. Until his death he resided on his estate at Chhaoni. Though there have been no distinguished members of this family in India except Col. W. L. Gardner, abovementioned, thanks to their marriages with various great houses, the family history is most distinctly interesting. The lineage is as follows :—William Gardner of Coleraine, Commander of a company during the siege of Derry, left a son, William, Lieutenant-Colonel of the 11th Dragoons. He had 5 sons and 7 daughters, of whom the 2nd, Valentine, was father of Col. W. L. Gardner by his wife Alida Livingstone; the 4th was Alan, 1st Baron Gardner.

Col. W. L. Gardner married Mahr Manzul-un-nissa Begam, Princess of Cambay. By her he had two sons, Alan and William James. Alan Gardner (whose inscription this is) married Bibi Sahiba Hinga, and left two daughters, Susan and Harmuzi. W. J. Gardner married first Bibi Sahiba Banu by whom he had a son, Hinga, and two daughters; and secondly, Mulka Humani Begam, daughter of Mirza Suleman Sheko, son of Shah Alam, and brother of Akbar Shah, Emperor of Delhi. Susan Gardner married Mirza Anjan Sheko, son of Mirza Suleman Sheko. Harmuzi married Stewart Gardner, son of Rear Admiral Francis Gardner, and grandson of Alan, 1st Lord Gardner, his cousin. Their son is Alan Legge Gardner, now in Government service. His son, Alan Hyde, married Jane, daughter of Anjan Sheko and Susan Gardner. There are also numerous ramifications, the descendants of Rear Admiral Francis Gardner and Stewart Gardner, his son.

Burke notes that since the death of the 3rd Baron (Alan Legge, son of Alan Hyde, 2nd Baron) the right to the barony has not been established though an heir obviously exists. A glance at the pages of Burke shows that the contention is sufficiently well founded; for the family is widespread to a degree. But for our purposes the most interesting point of the pedigree of this family is the remarkable relationship between an English baronial family, the house of Taimur, the Nawabs of Oudh and the Begs of Cambay.

The following members of the family are buried in this mausoleum, besides Alan Gardner :—

- (1) Col. W. L. Gardner, 1778—1835.
- (2) Mahr Manzul-un-nissa, his wife.
- (3) W. James Gardner, died 1845.
- (4) Mulka Humani Begam, his wife.]

396.—1853—THOMASON, J., B.C.S. Inscription :—Here lie the remains of James Thomason, late Lieutenant-Governor of the N.-W. Provinces. Died September 21st, A.D. 1853, aged 49 years. This grave was restored A.D. 1858.

"The souls of the righteous are in the hands of God : neither shall any grief hurt them."

[James Thomason was born in 1804 at Shelford, near Cambridge, the son of Revd. Thomas Thomason, a chaplain in Calcutta. In 1814 he went to England and was educated at Stansted and Haileybury. He returned to India in the B. C. S. in 1822. He became successively Assistant Registrar of the Sadr Court, Calcutta (1823) ; Deputy Secretary to Government (1830) ; and Collector of Azamgarh (1832), where he gained valuable settlement experience. In 1837 he became Secretary to Government, North-Western Provinces ; extra Member of the Board of Revenue (1841) ; Foreign Secretary to the Government of India (1842), and Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces in 1843 at the age of 39. His administration was directed to the improvement of settlement ("Land Revenue Administration prevalent in the North-Western Provinces" is his magnum opus on the subject) ; to the remodelling of the Public Works Department and to the execution of considerable public works, notably the Grand Trunk Road and the Ganges Canal. He founded the Thomason Engineering College at Roorkee in 1848, and opened the Benares College in 1853. He was responsible for causing many district statistical reports to be published and commenced the series of "Selections from the Records of Government". The spread of vernacular education by his system of tahsili schools was another feature of his policy. Conspicuous ability, devotion to the public service, conscientious discharge of every duty, surpassing administrative capacity, extensive knowledge of affairs, clear judgment, benevolence of character and suavity of demeanour are qualities attributed to him by the proclamation announcing his death. On the day he died he was appointed Governor of Madras.]

This tablet and chancel windows were erected in memory of the above named persons, who were murdered at Bareilly in June 1857.—A.D. 1863.

[There had been rumours of approaching mutiny in Bareilly for two months before it actually broke out on the 31st May 1857. Consequently most of the ladies and children of the station had been sent in time to Narni Tal. The troops (18th and 68th Native infantry and 8th Irregular cavalry) rose on the 31st. Some officers who had taken refuge in the lines of the 18th, who were supposed to be loyal, found they were as mutinous as the rest, and also escaped to the hills. Others took refuge with natives of rank, but were hunted out and murdered, mostly by the orders of Khan Bahadur Khan, a descendant of the Rohilla chief Hafiz Rahmat Khan, who set up his government in the city and ruled there till the approach of the British troops under Sir Colin Campbell.

The following details of the deaths of certain of the persons mentioned in the tablet are given in the Mutiny Narratives:—

Messrs. Robertson, Orr, and Hay were killed in the house of Hamid Hasan, the Munshif, who had promised to protect them, by the Kotwal and other bad characters.

Messrs. Buch and Raikes were killed in the house of Aman Ali Khan by some Mubammadans, assisted by Aman Ali's nephew.

The Aspinall family took refuge with Zakir Ali, a Karinda of Mr. Aspinall's, who gave them up to be slaughtered to Khan Bahadur Khan.

The Phellan and Davis families, Mr. and Miss Watts and Mr. Beale were murdered by the mob near the Nil-ki-chauki.

The Lawrence family were murdered and robbed by Faiz-ullah, Saiyid, with whom they took refuge.

Mr. Bolst was murdered by the Jail guard; Miss Bolst in the streets. The Camerons were killed in a godown near their own bungalow; the Alones whilst escaping to Faridpur. Dr. Hansbrow hid in the Jail, but was discovered and murdered by Khan Bahadur Khan at the Kotwali, as were Messrs. Nicholas and Jaques. Major Pearson, Captains Richardson and Hathorn, Lieutenants Dyson and Steward, and Quartermaster Sergeant Cross and his child were killed by the villagers of Ram Patti whilst escaping along the Shahjahanpur road. Sergeant Staples was killed at Baheri on his way to Naini Tal, Messrs. Fenwick and Richie and Sergeant Henry in the City, and Sergeant Worrell and Mr. Cruiser disappeared.

As regards Lieutenant Tucker, Forbes Mitchell tells the following story: There were apparently some renegade Europeans among the ranks of the mutineers (both Rees and he give instances). One of these, as he was subsequently told by an ex-mutineer, had been Sergeant-Major in a Bareilly native regiment. He had advised the murder of all European officers, and himself shot his Adjutant Tucker. He quotes from "A Short Account" of the Bareilly mutiny, which stated:

"The European Sergeant-Major had remained in the lines and Adjutant Tucker perished while endeavouring to save the life of the Sergeant-Major."

This curious tale rests on a certainly circumstantial account of the ex-mutineer's, who gave details of this renegade's career, which in one point was checked by Forbes Mitchell's own experience. But it is to be noticed, firstly, that this does not agree with the Mutiny Narrative as regards Lieutenant Tucker's death: he is said there to have been killed by his sepoy whilst mounting his horse in the mess compound. And, secondly, that every sergeant in Bareilly is accounted for in the Narrative, except Sergeant Worrell, who belonged to the Jail Department: whilst of the two sergeants of the 68th one was killed and one escaped to Naini Tal. The story, therefore, though it may be true, certainly does not agree with the Mutiny Narrative.

David Robertson was the son of Major D. Robertson, Bengal Army, and born at Agra in 1811. He was educated at Edinburgh and Haileybury (1827-9): he served in Bareilly, Nuddea, Benares, Delhi, Mainpuri, Saharanpur, Bijnor, and Farrukhabad.

George Hansbrow was born at Preston in 1823; he was the son of J. Hansbrow, Governor of Lancaster (as is).

Richard Green Tucker was the son of Captain W. Tucker (H. E. I. C.'s Maritime service) and was born in London in 1837.

Henry Edward Pearson (so the birth certificate shows) was born in 1809, the son of the Revd. T. Pearson, Rector of Witley, Worcestershire.

Taylor Campbell Richardson was the son of a Bengal Civilian. He was born in Sagar Roads in 1812. He joined the service in 1831.

Hugh Vans Hathorn (so both E. I. Register and birth certificate show) was son of Vans Hathorn, Writer to the Signet, and born at Edinburgh in 1819.

Henry Ross Stewart (not Steward, an error of the inscription) was the son of R. Stewart, Merchant, born at Calcutta in 1831.

John Charles Dyson was the son of Captain J. Dyson of the Bengal Army, born at Simla in 1837.

[Tomb not traceable. Inscription reproduced from Führer's List.]

James Charles Dick is the correct name, according to the baptismal certificate. He was the son of W. Dick, Assistant Surgeon, H. E. I. C. S., and afterwards a Mayfair physician, born at Fort William in 1792. He was at Haileybury (1808-9), arrived in India 1810, and served in Aligarh, Farrukhabad, Meerut, Bulandshahr, Fatehpur and Bareilly. Prinsep shows him as Commissioner of Revenue and Circuit at Bareilly in 1829, but that must have been a temporary promotion, as all other authorities show him as Judge and Magistrate in 1831. There were at least nine Dick's in the C. S. before 1842.]

- 401.—1845—FANTHOM, B., Captain. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Captain Bernard Fanthome, late of the H. E. I. Co.'s service, died at Bareilly November 25th, 1845, aged 74 years.

"The Lord is our defence."

—Pm. LXXXIX, 18.

[Bernard Fanthome was of French descent, and ran away from home probably about the time of the French Revolution. He served first under Raymond in Hyderabad and then migrated to Bhopal, where his brother Jean Baptiste commanded a brigade. He served under the Maharaja of Jaipur and fought at Madhogarh; he then joined Sindhia's service, but left him with many other officers when war with the British broke out, and joined Lord Lake, being made a Captain in Colonel Gardner's Irregular Horse. He retired after the war and lived first at Patna and then at Bareilly, where a market called Faltunganj still commemorates his name. He had studied medicine in his youth and now began to practise it again. On one occasion he was summoned by Metcalfe to attend Shah Alam at Delhi, but the Emperor died before he could even see him. He became physician to the Nawab of Rampur and subsequently his chief minister for a time; but disagreements followed and he returned to Bareilly, where he again practised medicine. He died somewhat suddenly in 1845.]

He had several sons. Their father's circumstances had become embarrassed and they were compelled to earn a living. The second, John Bernard, became first tutor of the Maharaja of Bhartpur (Balwant Singh) and then head clerk of the Political Agent's office. He was there in the Mutiny and rendered good service by transmitting intelligence to Agra. Of Captain Bernard Fanthome's two daughters, one married James Gardner, grandson of Colonel W. L. Gardner (No. 395), and the other, J. B. LeMaistre, a descendant of J. LeMaistre, Puisne Judge of Calcutta in Warren Hastings' time. The family is still represented by Mr. E. C. LeMaistre, Deputy Magistrate in this province.

Mr. J. B. Fanthome's son is Mr. J. F. Fanthome, retired Deputy Magistrate, to whom I am indebted for the material for this and several other notes, chiefly relating to Agra. His grandson, J. A. Fanthome, lies buried in Agra (No. 254); he was a lad of the greatest promise and had a musical talent far above the ordinary. His brother also died last year. Miss Louisa Fanthome (No. 252) was Mr. J. F. Fanthome's sister; J. F., like his brother F. Fanthome, are both antiquarians of no small repute, whose speciality is Agra.

Captain B. Fanthome married a daughter of J. F. Fauvel, a Frenchman in the service of Rampur. The name is said to have been originally Fantôme and the "h" was added to conceal it. But the two words would in French be pronounced exactly alike; and considering the obvious meaning ("Fantôme, Phantôme" means "Phantom") it seems to me more probable that the whole name is a disguise.

This is a particularly good instance of the history of those Anglo-Indian families which came into existence at the end of last century, and provide many of our best officers at the present day.]

- 402.—1857—SIBBALD, H., Brigadier. Inscription:—In memory of Brigadier Hugh Sibbald, C.B., Commanding in Rohilcund and Kumaun; murdered, after upwards of 51 years' service in the Bengal Army, by the mutineers of the Bareilly Brigade, on the 31st May 1857 in the 68th year of his age. This tomb is erected in token of affectionate remembrance by his widow and children.

[Cf. No. 399. He was "old and ill": he firmly believed in his troops and, like many other officers, fell a victim to his belief in their fidelity.]

He was appointed ensign in 1805 and by 1837 was Brevet-Major, at which point the record stops. He fought in Java and at the siege of Bhartpore, and was the son of W. Sibbald, merchant of Leith, born in 1791.]

[The 42nd Royal Highlanders, better known as the "Black Watch", arrived in India about the beginning of November 1857, and joined Sir Colin Campbell at Cawnpore, just before the third battle of Cawnpore, in which they took part. Thence they went with Adrian Hope to Bithur (November and December 1857). They marched with Sir Colin to Fatehgarh, and thence were again detached with Adrian Hope and fought at Shamsabad (January 1858). They took part in the siege of Lucknow as part of the 4th Brigade, and took the Mariner's (March 1858). They next went with Walpole in his advance into Roblikhand, via Sandila, Rudhamau, Sandi and Allahganj, and fought at Ruiya, where Adrian Hope was killed, and on the Ramgung. They were in the battle of Bareilly, where they were charged by "Ghaz's", and did well. They remained in garrison there; one wing went to Moradabad. The 42nd are now the 1st Battalion, the Black Watch (Royal Highlanders). They were raised in 1729, and were in India from 1857 to 1868 and 1896 to 1902. Their Indian honour is "Lucknow". They also fought in Egypt, the Peninsula, at Waterloo, in the Crimea, Ashanti and Egypt (1882-6).]

[The battle of Bhitaura, or Fatehganj, was fought by Sir Ralph Abercromby against the Rohillas under Ghulam Muhammad—it was in a war with the State of Rampur, which had been handed over to the Rohilla chief Faiz Ullah Khan when Rohilkhand came under the Nawab Wazir of Oudh. Defeat was very narrowly averted. Captain Ramsay was ordered to charge with the Light Cavalry; but by an error in judgment he presented his flank to the enemy, was charged, and his regiment was cut up. It was at this disastrous moment that Captain Mordaunt, Colonel Burrington, Major Bolton, Lieutenants Baker and Tilfer (see next entry), and all the officers of the 13th Native Infantry were killed. The rest of the line stood firm, however, and defeated the Rohillas after a fierce engagement in which we lost 14 officers and 600 men. Ghulam Muhammad was banished to Benares, and the State of Rampur, considerably reduced in extent, was given over to the infant son of Muhammad Ali, son of Faiz Ullah. Muhammad Ali had been defeated and killed by Ghulam Muhammad.]

Captain Ramsay left the field and the country and is shown as "deserted" in official lists. It is said he entered the French service. He is probably the Captain Ramsay of No. 370.]

This monument is erected by the friends and relatives of those honoured and beloved ones whose names are here inscribed, who yielded up their lives unto death, through the violence of a lawless and fanatical insurrection at this station on the 31st day of May A. D. 1857.

To the care of two poor natives, residents of this city, they owe a grave on this spot and in God their Saviour, we trust they have found a place.

"Lord Jesus receive my spirit,"

"Lord lay not this sin to their charge."

Henry Hawkins Bowling, Surgeon, 28th Regiment, B. N. I., aged 43.

Captain Marshall James, 28th B. N. I., aged 37.

The Reverend John MacCallam, aged 45.

Mordaunt Ricketts, B. C. S., Magistrate and Collector of this district, aged 30.

Arthur Chester Smith, Esquire, B. C. S., aged 22, an only and beloved son of the late E. Peplow Smith, Esquire, B. C. S., and Harriet, his wife.

John Robert LeMaistre, clerk in the Magistrate's office, aged 42 years.

[The mutiny at Shahjahanpur broke out on the 31st May. The 28th Native infantry revolted, whilst most of the Europeans in the station were in church. In the midst of service "six or seven Sepoys, armed with tulwars and lathis, rushed in upon us. Ricketts received one tulwar wound as he stood by my side, when he ran through the vestry door, and must have been cut down by some mutineers who were waiting outside. Captain Lysaght (cf. No. 411) with some other officers and myself succeeded in closing the church doors against our murderous assailants . . ." The church was defended for about an hour. Captain James was shot on the parade ground and Mr. Bowling whilst driving to the church. The rest then made their way to Powayan. The Raja Bajinath Singh sheltered them a night, but then sent them off, saying he could no longer protect them. Mr. Smith was killed by the sepoys in a hut in the city; he was ill with fever and had not gone to the church. Mr. LeMaistre was killed in the church: Mr. MacCallam escaped out of the city but was murdered by some villagers in a melon field. A. C. Smith was son of E. P. Smith, B.C.S., by his 2nd wife Harriet Chester. E. P. Smith was the fifth son of George Smith, M.P., for Midhurst. cf. No. 320. He was at Haileybury 1852-4 and arrived in India 1855. Ricketts was the son of M. Ricketts, H.E.I.C.S., born at Lucknow (where his father was Resident, cf. no. 943) in 1826. He was at Haileybury 1843-5 and came to India in 1846. His body was recovered and carefully buried by Amjad Ali, the Tahsildar. The "two poor natives" were Nasir Khan and Amir Ali, who caused the bodies to be collected and buried near the church.

ALLAHABAD DIVISION.

Cawnpore District.

ALL SAINTS' MEMORIAL CHURCH.

THE church, erected on the site of General Wheeler's entrenchment, is itself a monument to the memory of the victims of the Cawnpore massacres. It is built of red brick faced with buff sandstone in the Lombardo-Gothic style: the nave and transept are paved with marble, the chancel with Minton tiles. On the walls are 14 memorial tablets, giving the names of those who died in Cawnpore in 1857.

The English troops in Cawnpore in 1857 consisted of a company of Artillery, 60 men of the 84th, 30 of the 32nd and 15 of the 1st Madras Fusiliers. The Native troops were the 2nd Light Cavalry and the 1st, 53rd and 54th N. I. They were all, with the possible exception of the 53rd, disaffected. With civilians, women and children, the Europeans numbered not less than 950.

At this time there was residing at Bithur Dundhu Pant, alias the Nana Sahib, the adopted son of Baji Rao and heir to all his possessions but his pension; "a man of no capacity and debauched tastes . . . strong passions, and no principles to guide them." Though he considered himself aggrieved by the lapse of Baji Rao's pension, he maintained civil, even friendly, relations with the European residents. He even offered them assistance: and such trust was put in him, that the Magistrate, Mr. Hillersdon, asked him to guard the Treasury when matters became threatening.

"No very serious view was taken of matters in general." If there was a General in India who knew the sepoy, it was Sir Henry Wheeler. It may be that he knew him too well: that he relied too greatly on the half century's fidelity of which he had experience. But it is certain that he watched the troops narrowly and formed the opinion that, if they did revolt, they would march at once to Delhi: consequently, he would only be called on to meet the city rabble. It was this that induced him to choose his miserably weak position in place of the strong magazine, to hold which Lawrence urged him: for to seize this would have meant removing the sepoy guard and precipitating the outbreak. At all events he decided to entrench a couple of buildings (barracks) with a low mud wall over which "an English subaltern could have ridden on a cast horse from the Company's stud." The women and children were sent into this place on the 21st May and it was victualled for 25 days. Of arms and ammunition there was plenty: but of guns only ten.

On the 4th June two native regiments, the cavalry and the 1st N. I., rose. Neither at the time did any harm; they merely broke and fled. The 56th N. I. yielded to the temptation the next day. The 53rd were, by some extraordinary error in judgment, fired into by Ashe at Sir H. Wheeler's orders "and were literally driven from us by nine-pounders." Even then the native officers and some 80 men remained faithful.

Sir H. Wheeler's view, that the regiments when they mutinied would at once march on Delhi, was so proved correct. But the Nana Sahib, on whom everybody had relied, changed the situation. Whether of his own motion, or prompted by Azim-ul-lah his agent, he decided to attack the Europeans at Cawnpore with the sepoys, whom he at once joined and induced to return, instead of marching to Delhi.

So the siege began on the 7th June. The entrenchments were as already stated of the weakest possible kind: they were also surrounded by cover. Matters, however, were slightly improved by two barracks close to the entrenchment which the besieged continued to occupy. It is unnecessary to dwell on the miseries of the next three weeks. The defence was so vigorous that the rebels themselves were—and admitted that they were—astounded. But one barrack was fired: the number of the defenders grew daily less. Every single artilleryman was slain at the guns; no water could be obtained save at the risk of almost certain death. Capitulation was the only alternative to annihilation: and when on the 26th June a missive was received which promised to spare and send to Allahabad "all soldiers and others unconnected with the acts of Lord Dalhousie," a capitulation was decided on, contrary to the advice of many officers who would have preferred even the other alternative.

On the 27th June boats were provided to convey the remains of the garrison to Allahabad. And now followed the most dastardly piece of treachery that has perhaps ever been perpetrated. The party took their seats in the boats at the Sati Chaura Ghat: but "at a signal from the shore, the native boatmen . . . all jumped over and waded to the shore." Guns and musketry then opened on the boats: only one (Major Vibart's) could start, and they were reinforced by about a dozen swimmers. Of the passengers in the other boats, some were killed, some drowned, some taken prisoners. The slaughter went on till stopped by an order of Bala Rao, or the Nana. But only the women and children were spared. They were placed in the Savada Kothi.

The boat that escaped had 50 people on board and went down the river under a heavy fire. It grounded three times, the third time at Sheorajpur, thirty miles down the stream, on the morning, (it would seem) of the 29th. Here a party of fourteen—Mowbray Thomson, Dela Fosse, Sergeant Grady and eleven privates landed, to drive off their assailants. They actually drove them back without loss, but then, looking round, saw no signs of the boat. They retreated three miles and then seized a temple. Even here they drove the enemy back, and it was not till the mutineers brought up gunpowder and tried to blow up the place that they broke out and charged. Six fell: seven took to the water; of these three were killed. Mowbray Thomson, Dela Fosse, Murphy and Sullivan escaped and were saved by Raja Drighbijai Singh, of Murarman, in the present district of Rae Bareilly. The rest of the party in the boat were seized and brought back to Cawnpore, and the men were killed at once: the women and children were confined in the Savada Kothi. The first batch of Fatehgarh fugitives had been murdered as soon as they arrived (June 12th): the second batch now arrived; of them all the men but three were murdered, and the women and children with the Cawnpore prisoners were confined in the Bibigarh.

On the 15th July Havelock fought and won the battles of Aung and the Pandu Naddi. His army was within a day's march of the city. "Then ensued the last act of the tragedy of Cawnpore. It was pointed out to the Nana that the captives in the Bibigarh would supply damning evidence against all concerned in the massacres. First of all the five men were taken out and shot. Then a number of sepoys were selected and told to shoot down the women and children through the windows of the house. This was too much even for them : they fired at the ceiling instead. At the Nana's bidding four butchers, armed with knives, went in and hacked their victims to pieces. Next morning a heap of corpses, a heap of wounded and a number of children were dragged out and thrown, the living and the dead together, into a well hard by."

Two days later Havelock entered Cawnpore "too late to save, but not too late to avenge." But comment is needless: "sunt lacrimæ rerum." For the rest of the Cawnpore operations a skeleton is appended, which will assist to the understanding of the inscriptions.

413.—1857—VICTIMS OF CAWNPORE MASSACRES. Inscription.—To the Glory of God and in memory of more than a thousand Christian people who met their deaths hard by between 6th June and 15th July 1857. These tablets are placed in this the Memorial Church, All Souls, Cawnpore, by the Government, N.-W. Provinces. STAFF: Major-General Sir H. Wheeler, K. C. B.; Lady Wheeler and daughters; Lieutenant G. R. Wheeler, 1st N. I., A.-D.-C.; Lieutenant-Colonel E. Wiggins, 52nd N. I., D. J. A. G.; Mrs. Wiggins;

Major W. Lindsay, A.A.G.; Mrs. Lindsay and daughters; Ensign C. and Mrs. Lindsay; Brigadier-General Jack, O. B.; Mr. Jack; Captain Sir G. Parker, 74th N. I., Cantonment Magistrate; Captain Williamson, 71st N. I., D.A.C.G., Mrs. Williamson and child.

[The memorial consists of 14 tablets. For the sake of convenience I give each tablet separately, so that the notes may not become unnecessarily confused. About many of the names not even so much as the manner of death is known: and where it is recorded, there are occasional variations in the accounts given.

Sir Hugh Wheeler (1789-1857), son of Captain H. Wheeler, R. N., and Margaret, daughter of the 1st Lord Massy was educated at Richmond and Bath. He was appointed cadet in 1803 and joined the 24th N. I. and fought at Dehli in 1804 under Lake. He became Lieutenant-Colonel in 1835, and commanded the 48th N. I., at the storm of Ghazni. He was made C. B. for his services in the first Afghan war. In 1846 he became Brigadier; he commanded a brigade at Mudki and was wounded: but fought again at Aliwal. He commanded the Jalandhar Field force in 1848-49 and reduced the fortresses of Ranger Nagal, Kullawalia and Dulla. He became K. C. B. in 1850, and Major-General in 1854. He was doubtless killed in the boats.

Lieutenant G. R. Wheeler, his son and A. D. C., was killed by a round shot. He had just been wounded in the trenches and was resting on a sofa, when a round shot entered the door and killed him before all his family.

The Lindsays.—A slip of paper was found in the Bibigarh, as follows: "Mamma died July 12th; Alice died July 9th; George died June 27th... Uncle Willy died June 18th; Aunt Lilly died June 17th." Mowbray Thomson explains that this was in the handwriting of one of the Misses Lindsay: that "Mamma" was Mrs. George Lindsay; "George" was Ensign G. Lindsay: "Uncle Willy" and "Aunt Lilly" were Major and Mrs. W. Lindsay. In that case the three daughters (Alice, Frances and Caroline) would be daughters of Mrs. G. Lindsay, and either sisters or cousins of George Lindsay. The tablet is, therefore, misleading. C. Lindsay should be G. Lindsay: and the arrangement reads as if the first Mrs. Lindsay was Major Lindsay's wife, and mother of the three daughters: and the second, Ensign Lindsay's wife. To be clear the list should have read "Major and Mrs. W. Lindsay Mrs. G. Lindsay and daughters, Ensign G. Lindsay." Major Lindsay was blinded by splinters caused by a round shot. He lay for several days in extreme pain, but at last succumbed. (Dela Fosse says he died of fever.) Mrs. W. Lindsay died of grief, according to Mowbray Thomson. The other two Misses Lindsay were killed on the 15th July.

William Lindsay was the son of M. W. Lindsay, merchant, Dublin, born in 1810. He joined the service in 1836 and was a Major in 1854. G. Lindsay belonged to the 1st N. I. and joined the service in 1856: I could not find his papers.

Edwin Wiggins was the son of Lieut. Col. Wiggins of the Bengal Army and joined the service in 1835. He was born "abroad"—i.e. in India, but I could not trace the date. He was Deputy Judge Advocate General. His wife died on the 12th June.

Captain Williamson was the son of Lieut. Col. D. Williamson, born at Saugor in 1822. He joined the service in 1843.

[Major George Larkins, son of J. P. Larkins (query John Pascal Larkins? cf No. 813) was born in 1807 and joined the service in 1825. He was in general charge of the artillery, but could do little owing to ill-health. It is not known how he died.

Charles Dempster, son of Surgeon T. E. Dempster (Bengal establishment) was born at Buxar. He had fought at Chilianwala and Gujrat and commanded the west Battery. He was shot in the siege.

Burnett Ashburner, son of W. P. Ashburner of Westbury in Van Diemen's Land, was born at Longford in the same country in 1829. He was sent out on a reconnaissance on the 7th June, and never returned.

St. George Ashe, son of Major B. Ashe of the Bengal Army was born at Sitapur in 1830. He had seen service in Burma. He had brought his guns from Lucknow: he was killed whilst pushing off Vibart's boat.

John Alexander Haldane Eckford, son of Col. J. Eckford, 6th N. I., was born at Jaunpur in 1832. He commanded the S. E. battery, with Lieutenants Burney and Dela Fosse and was killed by a round shot in the siege.

I could not trace Burney and Macaulay. The former was killed in Vibart's boat: the latter signalized himself by the most unremitting attentions to the wounded men in the out post. He was captured in Vibart's boat at Sheorajpur and murdered. For Martin and Sotheby, cf. Nos. 438 and 436.

"Slaney," should read "Slane," for which it is a nickname. My informant is a soldier in charge of the church who has private information on the subject.

F. Whiting, son of F. Whiting, merchant, was born in London in 1822, and joined the service in 1842. He was educated at Addiscombe. He had seen service in the Sutlej campaign and was killed in Vibart's boat.

Swynfen Charles Jarvis, son of Capt. W. Jarvis, B. N. I., was born at Neemuch in 1830. He "always scorned to run," and was shot whilst calmly walking across the open in the midst of a shower of bullets." For the officers of the 32nd, see No. 440. I could not trace Lieutenant Saunders. He was captured in Vibart's boat.

George Julius Glanville, son of F. Glanville, late Grenadier Guards, was born in 1831 at St. German's in Cornwall and was educated at Bedford Grammar school. He commanded a detachment in Barrack No. 2, and was killed in Vibart's boat.]

[Edward Vibart, son of Col. Vibart, H. M. service, was born in 1807 and joined the service in 1825. He had fought at Ghazni and Punniar, and commanded the Redan. He was the last man to leave the entrenchments. His was the only boat that escaped. For its capture see preliminary note. He was wounded on the 28th June, and probably died of his wounds.

Edmund Charles Vibart, son of T. Vibart, B. C. S., was born in 1825 and joined the service in 1842. He was at Fatehgarh (cf. No. 385.)

E. J. Seppings, son of J. M. Seppings, Surveyor to H. E. I. C. at Calcutta, was born there in 1836. He was wounded in the arm and his wife in the thigh in Vibart's boat; he was murdered on the 30th June, she and her family on the 15th July.

Robert Urquhart Jenkins was the son of R. C. Jenkins, a Calcutta merchant, born in 1838. He had served at Multan and commanded the Railway Engineers' post in No. 4. He was shot through the jaw after a sortie by a wounded sepoy.

Richard Owen Quin, son of Lieut. T. Quin, 4th N. C., was born at Meerut in 1829. He died of fever during the siege.

Charles William Quin, son of W. C. Quin, barrister-at-law, of Stephen's Green, Dublin, was born in that town in 1830 and educated at Trinity College. He was wounded in Vibart's boat and captured.

John Hammond Harrison, son of B. Harrison, Madras C.S., was born at Barham, Kent, in 1832 and educated at King's College, London. He was killed in Vibart's boat on the 28th June.

William John Manderson, son of Captain J. R. Manderson (H. E. I. C's. Maritime service) was born in 1836 in London, and killed during the siege.

Francis Stoneham Montagu Wren, son of Major T. Wren, Madras N. I., was born at Northam, Devon, in 1836 and educated at Bedford Grammar school. His death is not mentioned.

Murray George Daniell, son of Captain E. M. Daniell (H. E. I. C's. Maritime service) was born at Carshalton in 1836.

Melville Balfour, son of C. Balfour, merchant, was born in London in 1838 and educated at Radley and Bradfield. Both these two officers were killed in Vibart's boat.

Walter Albert Stirling, son of Rear Admiral Sir J. Stirling, R. N., was born at Perth in West Australia in 1837. He did much execution during the siege as a sharpshooter.

I could not trace Dr. Boyes. He and his wife were both taken prisoners in Vibart's boat, and shot on the 30th June; the wife refused to leave her husband, the sepoys could not separate them, and both were shot together—one of the most touching incidents in the Cawnpore story.

Charles Mainwaring, son of G. Mainwaring, B. C. S., was born at Calcutta in 1839 and educated at Cheltenham.

Arthur John Boulton was the only officer who escaped from the mutiny of the 7th N. C. (stationed at Lucknow) at Chaudharpur. He was wounded then, but escaped to Cawnpore, riding his horse over the entrenchment wall. He was killed in Vibart's boat. He was the son of C. Boulton, of Brighton, born in 1834 and educated at Marlborough.

Lieutenant-Colonel Ewart, his wife and child were killed on their way to the boats near St. John's Church, by his own men, who mocked him with a sham parade. He was born 1803, the eldest son of Peter Ewart. The family is an old border family, dating back to 1370. Lieutenant-General J. F. Ewart, C. B., of Peninsula fame, was a cousin, and his son, the still more famous General, Sir J. A. Ewart, G. C. B., was the Colonel of the 93rd through the Crimea and Mutiny. Colonel Ewart's wife was née Emma Fooks.

James Henry Cruickshank Ewart was the son of J. S. Ewart, stockbroker, born in London in 1826.

Athill Turner was the son of C. Turner, of Liverpool, born in 1819. He joined the service in 1837. He was killed in Vibart's boat.

Lieutenant Gilbert Augustus Master was the oldest son of Major-General R. A. Master, C. B., and grandson of G. C. Master, B. C. S. The family, an ancient one of Kentish origin dating back to John Master of Sandwich, circa 1520, has had many Anglo-Indian members, since the days of Sir Streyntsham Master, Governor of Fort St. George from 1678—1681, including C. G. Master, C. S. I., member of Council at Madras 1884-9, and many others, mostly military men. It is not known when he died. His father was commanding the 7th N. Captain Halliday was shot whilst carrying some soup to his wife, who with her child died of small-pox. He was the third son of John Halliday of Chapel Cleeve, a family which claims connection with that to which Sir Leonard Halliday, Lord Mayor of London in 1805, belonged. His wife was Emma Letitia, daughter of A. W. Wyndham of Blandford; their child was a daughter, Edith Mabel by name.

Captain Kempland had served in the Punjab campaign and commanded the S. entrenchments. He was the son of Major G. A. Kempland, 8th L. C., born at Nasirabad in 1820. For G. A. Kempland, cf. No. 723.

H. T. A. Raikes (1831-1837) was the eldest son of H. T. Raikes, Judge in Calcutta. Of this family, too, very many members have served in India. It is a cadet branch of the Raikes of Bennington which dates back through Robert Raikes of Gloucester, the philanthropist and founder of Sunday schools, to Richard Raikes, a Burgess of Hull (circa 1570). Another branch, the Raikes of Treberfydd, are also descended from him : to this Charles Raikes, C. S. I., Commissioner of Lahore, belongs (cf. No. 4).

John Wright Henderson was the son of the Revd. R. Henderson of Stirling, born in 1838 at Stirling and educated at Glenalmond. Robert William Henderson (No. 418) was his brother (born 1836 and also educated at Glenalmond and at University College, Oxford) : the former was wounded whilst swimming to Vibart's boat, but reached it with Mowbray Thomson's help : the latter, who was with him, was drowned.

Robert Allen Stevens, son of Revd. H. Stevens, was born at Wilmington, Kent, in 1839 and educated at Marlborough.

[Of these Engineers those who were killed are to be found on the tablets. Mowbray Thomson says of them : "I remember particularly Messrs. Heberden, LaTouche and Miller as prominent for their eminently good services. They held Barrack No. 4 for three days with no military aid whatever; they were then put under Captain Jenkins. Their trained sharpness of vision and correct judgment of distances, acquired in surveying, made them invaluable as marksmen." Mr. Heberden was killed by a round shot. Messrs. Miller and LaTouche in the boats.]

- 436.—1857—BEATSON, S., Captain. Inscription:—In memory of Stuart Beatson, Captain, 1st Regiment, Bengal Light Cavalry, who died at Cawnpore on the 19th of July 1857, in the discharge of his duty, as Assistant Adjutant-General with the force under the late Sir H. Havelock, aged 32 years.

[W. S. Beatson, son of Col. W. S. Beatson, Bengal Army, was born at Calcutta in 1825 and educated at Edinburgh and Haileybury. He was Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General not Assistant Adjutant-General, (as in inscription,) of Havelock's force. He did good work at the battles of Fatehpur and at Cawnpore, and was twice mentioned in despatches. He died of cholera. The story goes that though he was so ill that he could not ride, he had himself carried into action on a tumbril. His son was Major-General Sir Stuart Beatson, K. C. S. I., C. B., late Inspector-General of Imperial Service Troops.]

Instantly Hardy (the Captain of the battery) was killed." The date 17th is a mistake. It should be 16th.]

- 438.—1857—(1) GORDON, J., Captain. (2) HENSLEY, A. P. Lieutenant. (3) THOMPSON, W. T., Ensign. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Captain John Gordon, Lieutenant Arthur Platt Hensley, H. [Captain Gordon was killed in Windham's defence of Cawnpore on the 28th November.

Lieutenant Hensley was killed in Windham's defence of Cawnpore on the 29th November.

Ensign Thompson was killed in Campbell's relief of Lucknow. The fighting on the 18th November was street-fighting round the Residency. The 82nd were formerly the Prince of Wales Volunteers, and are now known as the 2nd Battalion the Prince of Wales South Lancashire Regiment. They were raised in two Battalions in 1793: the 2nd Battalion was disbanded in 1795, raised again in 1803 and disbanded in 1815. The first Battalion was in India from 1856 to 1869 and from 1895. They have the honour "Lucknow." They also fought in the Peninsula, Canada (1815) and the Crimea.]

- 439.—1857—OFFICERS and men, 34th Regiment. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Lieutenant Edward Jordan, Ensign Theophilus G. B. Applegate, died of wounds, Ensign Lyndon J. Grier, Colour-Sergeant Charles Feddon, Sergeant Patrick Jones, Corporal James Stock, Corporal William Clarke, one drummer, and twenty-four privates, all of Her Majesty's 34th or Cumberland

Regiment, who were killed in action or died of wounds received at Cawnpore on the 28th November 1857. This tablet is erected by the officers of the regiment to mark their esteem and regard for their late youthful and gallant brother officers, and to record the sincere sorrow expressed by all ranks at their early deaths; also as a tribute of respect and admiration to the bravery and devotion of their late comrades, the Non-Commissioned Officers, drummers and private soldiers who fell upon the same occasion.

[The 34th are now the 1st Battalion, the Border Regiment. They fought in the Peninsula: their only Indian honour is Lucknow. The operations in which these soldiers fell were those under Carthew in the action near Cawnpore (3rd.) For the vexed question of his retreat, see references given below. — Edward Jordan born 1836 was the son of the Revd. G. W. Jordan of Wheatley Oxon. He was educated at Marlborough.]

440.—1857—OFFICERS and men, 32nd Light Infantry. Inscription:—In memory of the following officers of the Thirty-Second Cornwall Regiment, Light Infantry, who with four hundred and forty-eight Non-Commissioned Officers and private soldiers were killed, or died in the discharge of their duty during the defence of Lucknow and Cawnpore and the subsequent campaign against the mutineers in the year of Our Lord 1857:—Colonel C. A. F. H. Berkeley, C. B.; Lieutenant-Colonel W. Case; Captains C. Stevens, J. Moore, J. W. Mansfield, W. Power, B. M. Caba; Lieutenants E. DeL. Joly, J. D. Thompson, F. Wainwright, P. C. Webb, J. Brackenbury, E. C. Hill, W. H. Study, J. W. Charlton. Also in memory of Mrs. Moore, Mrs. Wainwright, Miss Wainwright, Mrs. Hill; forty-three soldiers' wives and fifty-five children of the same Regiment, murdered at Cawnpore in June of the same fatal year. This monument is erected by friends and comrades in token of affection and sorrow.

"The sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."

[The 32nd Cornwall Light Infantry, now the 1st Battalion Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, have the Indian honours of "Punjab," "Multan," "Gujrat" and "Lucknow." They were in all the Lucknow operations and bore the brunt of the heavy fighting in the trenches both there and at Cawnpore. They also were at Dettingen, in the Peninsula, at Waterloo, and in S. Africa. Of the officers mentioned:—

Colonel Berkeley—(1818-1858).—He was the second son of General Sir G. Berkeley, and great grandson of the fourth Earl of Berkeley, a very ancient family dating back to Robert Fitzharding, circa no. 1160. He was formerly in the Scots Fusilier Guards and died on the "Simla" off Socotra. He was Deputy Adjutant-General and Military Secretary to Sir J. Outram; "he displayed remarkable activity and intelligence," and did good service all through the Lucknow operations. He was severely wounded in a charge of Hodson's Horse at the Alumbagh on the 26th February. He was reported for honourable mention.

Colonel Case—Was killed at Chinhat. It appears that he protested against immediate attack on the ground that the men were not ready, i.e., had not rested or had their breakfasts. When the retreat began Captain Bassano, of the 32nd, wanted to bring him away, but Case refused; and when he persisted, "issued his last command—'Leave me, Sir, and rejoin your company.'"

Captain Stevens.—Took command when Colonel Case was killed and also lost his life at Chinhat.

Captain Moore.—Was the life and soul of the Cawnpore defence. A tall genial Irishman, he was wounded early in the siege, but he went about with his arm in a sling, doing his duty. He carried out one daring and successful sally. "He was cheerful and animated to the last and inspired all around him with a share of his wonderful endurance and vivacity." He was killed in Yibart's boat on the 27th June. Mrs. Moore "sometimes came across with him to our barrack and we fitted up a little hut for her, made of bamboo, and covered over with canvas; there she would sit for hours, bravely bearing the absence of her husband while he was gone on some perilous enterprise."

Mrs. Moore, Lieutenants Wainwright and Hill and their families were also killed at Cawnpore.

Captain Mansfield was A. D. C. to General W. R. Mansfield (afterwards Lord Sandhurst), Sir Colin's Chief of the Staff. He was severely wounded at the taking of the Subadar's tank in the 4th battle of Cawnpore on the 6th December. (It does not however seem clear whether this officer or another Captain Mansfield is meant. The only Captain J. W. Mansfield given in Forrest is the above; but his regiment is not mentioned. There is another Captain Mansfield of the 32nd whose initials are not given, who died of cholera at Lucknow on the 13th September.)

Captain W. Power was shot in the front verandah of the Residency on the 2nd July and died of his wounds on the 10th August. He was son of George Power, a member of His Majesty's Council, St. Vincent, who was a younger son of Sir John Power of Tullamaine, Co. Tipperary.

Captain McCabe did excellent service all through the defence of the Residency. He had won his commission at Multan where he was the first man to plant the British flag. He led a sally on the 20th August against Johannes' House and another soon after Havelock's arrival. He was killed in a sortie on the 29th September, his fourth sortie according to Rees, who places him second only to Fulton among the defenders of the Residency (cf. No. 958).

Lieutenant Joly had been absent on leave from his regiment and had joined the 78th Highlanders. He was wounded at the storming of the Alumbagh and died soon after in the Residency.

Lieutenants Thomson and Brackenbury were both killed at Chinhat. Lieutenant Webb did his best to stop the retreat at that battle—"his face black with gunpowder and the peak of his cap shot off, he made himself hoarse with shouting to the men to halt." He was killed by an 18 pounder in Gubbins' compound on the 28th August. Ensign Studdy was wounded in the arm by a round shot in the Residency; he suffered amputation "which, as usual, proved fatal;" he died on the 9th August. Lieutenant Charlton was shot through the head at the Residency on the 13th July, but Gubbins says he was not killed. The musket ball hit him in the back of the head and lodged in the brain: and nine months later it showed itself at the aperture and was removed in England. Whether the inscription or Gubbins is in error, or Lieutenant Charlton died after the operation, is not clear].

441.—1857—1870—OFFICERS, 88th Regiment. Inscription:—

In memory of the undermentioned Officers of the 88th Connaught Rangers:—Captain H. H. Day, killed in action at Pandoo Nuddee, 26th November 1857, aged 20 years; Ensign F. M. Mitchell, died at Cawnpore, 7th December 1857, of wounds received in action at Pandoo Nuddee, 26th November 1857, aged 36 years; Ensign W. King, died at Cawnpore, 20th June 1858, aged 24 years; Ensign J. R. Perrin, died at Lucknow, 11th October 1858, aged 23 years; Lieutenant R. Miller, died at Déhra Ghat, 5th November 1860, aged 23 years; Quartermaster M. Evans, died at Cawnpore, 20th June 1864, aged 23 years; Lieutenant F. M. M. Mapleton, died at Cawnpore, 17th August 1865, aged 21 years. Captain L. S. Watson, died at Galle, 12th September 1865, aged 33 years; Captain L. C. Scott, died at Jullunder, 1st April 1870, aged 31 years. Erected by their brother officers.

[The 88th, now the 1st Battalion of the Connaught Rangers, were in Windhams' operations at Cawnpore, and it was in his battle of the Pandu Naddi (2nd), that Captain Day "a very promising young officer" and Ensign Mitchell were killed. These were the only operations in Upper India in which the 88th took part; presumably they were subsequently sent to join Rose or Whitlock, as they have the honour "Central India." They were raised in 1793, and were in India from 1799-1801, 1857-1870, 1879-1891. Their only other Indian honour is "Seringsapatam" with the elephant. They also fought through the Peninsular war, in the Crimea, S. Africa (1877-9) and the Boer war.

This tablet is erected by his parents and family as a memorial of one deeply lamented.

"The dead shall be raised incorruptible."

[John Little, (1835-58) was the 3rd son of John Little, descended from the family of Little's, of Legacurry, Co. Tyrone. He served in the Crimea: a younger brother is Canon Knox-Little. The 20th are now the Lancashire Fusiliers.]

- 443.—1838—LYNCH, W. W., Major-General. Inscription:—In loving memory of Major-Gen. William Wiltshire Lynch, C. B., of Pareora Stoke, near Guilford, Surrey, born 1st April 1831, died 4th August 1888. He began his military life at Cawnpore with the 70th Regt. He led the volunteers of Havelock's column in the advance on Cawnpore. He was severely wounded when serving under that heroic leader before Lucknow, and was promoted to a company in the 2nd Queen's Royals for his services in the Mutiny. He died of cholera at Allahabad while in command of the district. This tablet is inscribed by his wife.

[One of Barrow's volunteer cavalry, who did so well with Havelock. Their charge at the battle of Cawnpore elicited from Havelock the remark "Well done gentlemen volunteers. I am proud to command you." Twenty strong when they left Allahabad, they lost 3 killed and 11 wounded by the time they reached Lucknow. Lieutenant Lynch was wounded in the arm at Lucknow].

["The first casualty occurred at the West battery, McGuire, a gunner, being killed by a round shot; the poor fellow was covered with a blanket and left in the trench till nightfall. Several of us saw the bullet bounding towards us and he also suddenly saw it, but . . . : seemed fascinated to the spot." (Mowbray Thomson). But these are probably the tombs of Messrs. Wade and Murphy of the East Indian Railway, who were the only persons buried inside the entrenchments, according to Mowbray Thomson].

[The monument consists of a marble statue of a palm-bearing angel (by Marochetti), standing on a stone base at the foot of a cross. The well is surrounded by a light Gothic screen of sandstone designed by Colonel H. Yule, Bengal Engineers. On the portal is inscribed; "These are they which came out of great tribulation." It was erected by Government in 1863.]

MEMORIAL GARDENS CEMETERY.

- 449.—1857—(1) THORNHILL, R. B., B.C.S. (2) THORNHILL, M., Mrs., and two children. Inscription:—In memory of Robert Bensley Thornhill, Judge of Fatehgarh, Mary his wife, and their two children, killed July 15th, 1857.

"Though he slay me yet will I trust in Him."

[Cf. No. 385-425. R. B. Thornhill was the son of J. Thornhill, B.C.S., and a Director of the E.I.C. He was born at Great Stanmore in 1818, educated at Addiscombe (he was originally intended for the army) and Haileybury (1853-6) and arrived in India in the latter year. He served in Jessore, Allahabad, Agra, Budaun, Meerut, Farrukhabad, Cawnpore, Muzaffarnagar, Mainpuri and Banda.

He was one of the Thornhill's, eight of whom were "Bensley Thornhill," who served in the C.S. R. B. Thornhill's grandfather was a Cudbert Thornhill, in all probability the Cudbert Thornhill who was known as the 18th century Sindbad; he had lived in Calcutta long before 1756, and escaped the Black Hole by fleeing to Fulta. From 1785 to 1808 he was master attendant at Calcutta. His son John Thornhill was born there in 1773; this was R. B. Thornhill's father. Other Bensley Thornhill's were John, first in the China service of the E.I.C. and then in the B.C.S. (born 1808); his mother's name was Henrietta Sarah Thornhill; Cudbert (born 1820), Secretary to Government at Agra in the Mutiny; Mark,

(born 1826), Magistrate of Muttra in the mutiny; Henry, (born 1826), Deputy Commissioner of Sitapur, where he was killed in the mutiny. These three, with R. B. Thornhill, were also sons of John Thornhill and Henriette Philippine, his second wife. J. B. Thornhill No. 883 and E. B. Thornhill (born 1834) were sons of J. B. Thornhill above mentioned. They also served in the mutiny; so that six Bensley Thornhill's—four brothers and two nephews, of theirs—were all serving in the mutiny in this province together. Besides them, a "relative" of John Thornhill's named George, son of Thomas Thornhill, was also in the C. S. Mr. A. H. Bensley has informed me that the origin of the name Bensley was this. Robert Bensley the actor on retiring from the stage made his home with the Thornhill's, and as his cousin Sir W. Bensley was a Director of the E.I.C., their careers were naturally turned India-wards. As a matter of fact this was only an additional cause: for the family was always Anglo-Indian, and their father himself was in the B.C.S. However it was Sir W. Bensley who nominated John Thornhill the father; though all his sons as well as G. Thornhill were nominated by himself (save in one case where the son was nominated by his father's executor.) Of the younger generation, J. B. Thornhill was nominated by H. St. G. Tucker and E. B. Thornhill by J. C. Whiteman.]

"Spare Thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach, that the heathen should rule over them; wherefore should they say among the people, where is their God? Fear not, O Lord, be glad and rejoice, for the Lord will do great things."

[The date given is wrong. It should be the 15th July. The text (Joel ii, 17 and 21) is wrong; it should read "Fear not O Lord."]

This was the regiment Sir H. Havelock-Allan obtained the V. C. for leading at Cawnpore. They did magnificent service all through the mutiny. They are now the 1st Battalion, The Prince of Wales' (North Staffordshire) Regiment. They were raised in and were in India from 1849 to 1861, and 1897 to 1908. MIRPUR CEMETERY.

- 457.—1858—PEEL, W., Sir, Captain, R. N. Inscription.—To the memory of William Peel. His name will ever be dear to the British inhabitants of India, to whose succour he came in the hour of need and for whom he risked and gave his life. He was one of England's most devoted sons, and with all the talent of a brave and skilful sailor, he combined the virtues of a humble and sincere Christian. This stone is erected over his remains by his military friends in India and several of the inhabitants of Calcutta. Captain Sir William Peel, R. N., K.C.B., was born in Stanhope-street, Mayfair, on the 2nd November 1824, and died at Cawnpore on the 27th April 1858.

William Peel was 3rd son of Sir Robert Peel (1824-1858). He entered the Navy in 1838 and saw service in the Mediterranean, China, the Pacific, N. America and W. Indies. He became Post-Captain in 1849. He was the author of "A Ride through the Nubian Desert" (1852). He won his V. O and the C. B. at Sebastopol with the Naval Brigade. When in command of H. M. S. Shannon he took a Naval Brigade up country, with ten 8-inch guns. He was at the battle of Khujwa where on the death of Col. Powell, he assumed command: at the 2nd relief of Lucknow, at the assaults on the Martinieres, Shah Najaf and Kaisarbagh, where he "behaved very much as if he had been laying the Shannon alongside an enemy's frigate," bringing his guns up to a few yards of the building. He was also at the 4th battle of Cawnpore and at the siege of Lucknow, where he was wounded, but not dangerously, in the thigh. A carriage was prepared for him but he preferred to use a doolie "like one of his bluejackets." This had apparently been used by a small-pox patient; he caught the disease and died on the 27th April at Cawnpore. "The loss of his daring but thoughtful nature joined with eminent abilities is a very heavy one to his country: but it is not to be more deplored than the loss of that influence which his earnest character, admirable temper, and gentle, kindly bearing exercised on all within his reach." So ran the proclamation issued after his death: these sonorous phrases state no more than the simple fact that he was a fine specimen of a British sailor.

The Peel family is of considerable antiquity. It dates back to Robert Peel of Hole House, who died in 1608. The first baronet was Sir Robert Peel (1750-1890) and M. P. for Tamworth from 1790-1818. His son the Right Honourable Sir Robert Peel, father of Sir William (1788-1850) was the celebrated orator and statesman. Of his five sons four attained considerable distinction, viz., Sir Robert Peel, P.C., G.C.B., M.P., Chief Secretary for Ireland (1861-65); Sir Frederick Peel, P.C. K.C.M.G., M.P., Sir William Peel, and Arthur Wellesley first Viscount Peel, Speaker from 1884 to 1895. The present baronet is also Sir Robert.]

Sothey, Captain, 34th Regiment, Madras Infantry, who in the 19th year of his age met his untimely death amongst the victims of the massacre of Cawnpore, in June 1857. - 459.—1857—OFFICERS AND MEN, 64th Regiment. Inscription:—In memory of Major Stirling, Captain Morphy, Captain McCrae, Lieutenant Mackinnon, Lieutenant Gibbon, 52nd Regiment attached, and twelve Non-Commissioned officers and men of the 64th Regiment, killed in action at Cawnpore, 27th November 1857.

[These officers fell in Windham's action of the 28th (not 27th) in the much criticized operations of Brigadier Carthew. The 64th moved up a ravine commanded in front and on both flanks by the enemy. There were four guns on the ridge in front of them. They rushed the ridge led by Brig. Wilson (their own colonel), and charged the guns, which they took. Major Stirling, Captain Morphy and Captain McCrae were all killed here: the two Lieutenants are returned as "missing." Major Stirling at Havelock's battle of Cawnpore had been slightly wounded just at the time when Lieutenant Havelock took his place at the head of the regiment, and had gone to the rear.]

- 460.—1857—MISSIONARIES of the S. P. G. Inscription:—To the Glory of God. In memory of W. H. Haycock, Priest, and Henry Edwin Cockey, Deacon, of the S. P. G. Mission to Cawnpore; also of M. J. Jennings, Priest, Chaplain, founder of the S. P. G. Mission to Delhi; also of Alfred Roots Hubbard, Priest, and Daniel Corrie Sandys, Catechist, and Louis Koch, Catechist, of the S. P. G. Mission to Delhi. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts dedicates this memorial of its brethren who glorified God by their deaths in the Mutiny of 1857.

"Here is the Patience and the Faith of the Saints." (Also in Urdu.)

[The S. P. G. Mission in Delhi was founded by the Revd. Midgely John Jennings, a chaplain of the E. I. C., in 1850. A Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, he had accepted an Indian chaplaincy in 1832. He had long dreamed of a mission in Delhi, but it was not till 1851 that he was stationed there. Next year occurred the conversion of Ram Chandra, a Kayasth professor of the Delhi College, and a leading Hindu of Delhi; and also of Chimman Lal, Assistant Surgeon in the Delhi Hospital. Mr. Jennings now felt justified in pressing for help from England. The S. P. G. at once agreed, and sent out the Revd. S. Jackson and the Revd. A. R. Hubbard. By 1856 the mission had made considerable progress and was contemplating an extension to Rurki. But in 1857 the Mutiny burst. Mr. Jennings and his daughter were murdered in the palace whilst attending to the wounds of Mr. Hutchinson, the Collector, and Captain Douglas, Commandant of the Palace Guards. Miss Clifford, Mr. Hubbard, Mr. Sandys and Mr. Koch were also all murdered that day, as were Chimman Lal and Wilayat Masih, the chief convert of the Baptist Mission. The Delhi Mission had been completely swept away. But only for a time; special efforts were made at home to restore it. In October 1857 the Revd. T. Skelton, Fellow of Queen's College Cambridge, offered his services for the purpose; he was succeeded in 1860 by the Revd. R. R. Winter. In 1877 was started the Cambridge Mission, which was amalgamated with it.

It is now one of the most successful and largest missions in India. Its work is many-sided. It has many small "bastis" or settlements of Indian Christians in and around Delhi. It has branches at Rohtak, Karnal, Rivari and Gurgaon. St. Stephen's College and St. Stephen's High School both belong to it: it has long possessed a fully equipped hospital (also St. Stephen's) and a new one is now being built. St. Mary's Home and the Victoria Boarding School for girls are some of its institutions for women. It has two churches in Delhi besides others elsewhere. Among its famous names are those of Mr. Skelton, Prebendary of Lincoln, Mr. Whitley, later Bishop of Chota Nagpur, Mr. Bickers-teth, afterwards Bishop of Japan, Mr. G. A. Lefroy, Bishop of Lahore. The mission founded by Jennings and "baptized in his blood" has grown and flourished.

The S. P. G. Mission at Cawnpore is considerably older than the sister Mission at Delhi, and was a well-established institution at the time of the Mutiny. In 1853 Mr. Haycock was one of the Revd. H. Sells' assistants, but in 1857 Mr. Sells went home ill, and Mr., (by then the Revd.) W. H. Haycock was in charge, with Messrs. Willis and Cookey, both students of Bishop's College, to assist him. Mr. Willis had to go to Calcutta to be ordained and so it fell out that only Messrs. Haycock and Cookey were left to go into the entrenchments. Of Mr. Haycock little appears to be recorded. I found a tomb at Agra in the Protestant cemetery to a child of a W. H. Haycock, which makes it possible that at one time, previous to his ordination, he was in Agra. At the time of the Mutiny his wife had died, and his children were at school in the Himalayas; they were afterwards supported and educated in England by the S. P. G. How he died is uncertain. One account is that he was killed on the 7th June by one of the first shots as he was entering the entrenchments. But Mowbray Thomson says: "He (the Revd. Mr. Haycock) had been accustomed to bring out his aged mother every evening into the verandah for a short relief from the fetid atmosphere within the barrack walls: the old lady was at length severely wounded, and her acute sufferings overcame the son's reason, and he died." It is a good instance of the uncertainty which hangs over the fates of so many of the Cawnpore victims—in one case a quick and merciful death: in the other as horrible a death as could be devised—and authority for both views. Of Mr. Cookey, Mowbray Thomson says that he remembered his being in the entrenchment, but did not know how he met his death; the only statement on the point I have been able to find is that of Mrs. Bradshaw, the wife of a musician, who said she saw Mr. Moncrieff and two other clergymen, one of whom was the R. C. Padre, the Revd. J. Rooney, at the boats on the 27th June. "We saw the clergyman take out a book; we did not see him read it, for a sowar rode into the water and cut him down.... He then killed the Padre and the other, who was a missionary." The S. P. G. account states, however, that some witnesses attribute this reading to Mr. Cookey. The book was a prayer book: the part of it read the Burial Service. At all events, it seems clear that Mr. Cookey was killed with Messrs. Moncrieff and Rooney by a sowar of the 2nd B. C. at the boats.

As at Delhi so at Cawnpore, the mission grew stronger after the Mutiny than it ever was before. In 1858 the Revd. W. Willis returned, to find the mission in ruins. But in 1860 Christ Church was restored and handed over to the S. P. G., as a mission church: the first incumbent was the Revd. S. B. Burrill. In 1860 Mr. Willis left and the mission was joined by the Revd. J. R. Hill (now at Banda and to whom I am indebted for the material for this note). Christ Church College, with four schools, St. Martin's Home, the Orphanage of the Epiphany for girls, the Deaconess' Home, the Women's Missionary Association Hospital, the Poorhouse, are some of the institutions belonging to the mission. Fatehgarh, Orai and Hamirpur are the out-stations. To both these missions an old saying is peculiarly applicable—"The blood of martyrs is the seed of the Church."

- 464.—(Uncertain)—SMITH, Lieutenant. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Lieutenant Smith of the Bengal European Regiment, who was killed in action on the Frontiers.

[This tomb is said to be over a hundred years old. I have looked through Dodwell and Miles and other lists, but have failed to identify this Lieutenant Smith. "Lieutenant Smith" without initials or date of death, would seem as elusive as the proverbial needle in a haystack: but I have discovered the following facts. Working on the supposition that the tomb belongs to the latter end of the 18th century, we find that the B. E. Regiment was stationed at Cawnpore from 1796 onwards; and was concerned in two small expeditions from that station in 1797 and 1798. The former was directed to putting Saadat Ali on the throne of Oudh, the latter against Zeman Shah. In a list of the officers of the B. E. Regiment of 1796, there is no Smith given; so that this officer, if he died in either of these expeditions, must have been killed almost as soon as he joined the Regiment. If the tomb is rather older than 1796, Dodwell and Miles offers two possibilities, one Thomas Smith died 1783, one John Smith died 1789: but there was no fighting round Cawnpore at the time, so far as is known to me, and there is nothing to show that either was in the B. E. Regiment. On the other hand, if the tomb is rather later than 1796, we find two Lieutenants named Smith in the B. E. Regiment in 1804—James and John R. Smith, who joined it in 1798 and 1800; and of course at this time there was plenty of fighting of all sorts, from

Lake and his important campaigns to petty actions in the "Mud war," of which Kachaura was an example.]

[The well was outside the Entrenchments and used as a burial place for those who were killed or died during the siege. It was about 200 yards away and the dead were buried there at night. 473.—1817—HORSFORD, J., Major-General Sir. Inscription :—
Sacred to the memory of Sir John Horsford, Knight Commander of H. M.'s Most Honourable Order of the Bath, a Major-General on the Staff and Colonel Commandant of Artillery on the H. C.'s Establishment, who after a long career of meritorious service distinguished by the most perfect integrity and honour, departed this life on the 20th of April, A. D. 1817, aged 66; an exemplary victim to that spirited ardour and high sense of duty which led him but a few weeks before under great bodily sufferings and in very severe weather, to manifest his professional skill and fortitude at the siege and capture of Hathras.

[John Horsford (1757-1817), son of John Horsford, educated at Merchant Taylor's and St. John's, Oxford (fellow 1768-71) was destined for the church, but enlisted in the E. I. C.'s Artillery under the name of John Rover to escape that career (1772). His identity was discovered by Colonel T. D. Pearse in 1778 and he was given a commission. He served in Mysore, (1790-1) at Bangalore, Arikera and Seringapatam, and at a later date under Lake, commanding the artillery at Aligarh, Delhi, Agra, Dig and Bhurtpore, always with great distinction. He became captain in 1786, major in 1801, Lieutenant-Colonel in 1804 (Brevet-Major 1795, Brevet-Lieutenant-Colonel 1800), Lieutenant-Colonel Commandant 1805, Colonel Commandant 1810, Major-General 1813. He received his K. C. B. in 1817. His last active service was at the siege of Hathras, the stronghold of Daya Ram, a rebellious zamindar; he died a few days after the reduction, of ossification of the heart. He never had a day's leave in 45 years' service, and is a fine example of the older race of Anglo-Indian worthies.]

[He was son of Dr. M. M. O'Brien, born at Ennis in 1807; and is apparently the officer who was in command at Allahabad after the departure of Neill. He is last heard of as escorting money to Cawnpore and being ordered back to Fatehpur (17th October.)]

- 487.—1857—TUCKER, R. T., B. C. S. Inscription:—R. T. Tucker fell at the post of duty 1857, looking unto Jesus.

[Robert Tudor Tucker, cousin of Colonel Tudor Tucker, killed at Fatehgarh (No. 385,) was the son of H. St. G. Tucker, B. C. S., born at Edinburgh in 1817. He was educated at Addiscombe and Haileybury and came to India in 1836. He had served at Patna, Etawah, Agra, Azamgarh, Ghazipur, Benares and Aligarh. He was at this time Judge at Fatehpur, and was the life of the Fatehpur defence. When the rest abandoned a certainly untenable position and made their way to Banda he remained at his post, and kept the rebels at bay from the top of the cutcherry. It was not till he had killed some 14 of his assailants that he was slain. He was a devout Christian, whose epitaph sums up both his life and his death. "It is impossible not to admire, how far it may be regretted, the heroic devotion of the late Mr. Tucker: nor is it much a matter of wonder that his conduct and his personal prowess actually succeeded in preserving, for a few hours longer, some show of order. Mr. Tucker by his earnest and open profession of religion, and by his unbounded pecuniary liberality had commanded the respect, if not the affection, of a large number of the inhabitants of the city, and when the excited mob returned in triumphant procession from his slaughter, two Hindus of the town stood out before them and reviled them as the murderers of a just and holy man; it is scarcely necessary to add that they immediately shared his fate."]

- 488.—1857—POWELL, T. S., Colonel. Inscription:—"Sacred to the memory of Thomas Sidney Powell, Colonel, 53 Regiment, who fell gloriously in the moment of victory, commanding H. M.'s forces at the action of Khujoa, near Fatehpore, 1 Nov. 1857. Erected by the officers of the Regiment."

[Colonel Powell was in command of a small force which defeated a strong force of mutineers at Khajua. Powell was shot through the head at the outset but Peel who, with the Naval Brigade, was charging in flank cut the rebels in two and seized two guns. The English losses were severe.

Nailed to a tree trunk is an inverted tin plate on which the following words have been scratched—"To the memory of Private Thomas Richards, Her Majesty's 5th Fusiliers died 5th July 1858." It is not clear when the 5th were here—probably in passing through after the mutiny was over.]

- 489.—1857—COCKERELL, H. E., B. C. S. Inscription:—In memory of Henry Edmund Cockerell of the Bengal Civil Service, who perished in the insurrection in the town of Banda on the 15th June 1857, in the twenty-seventh year of his age.

[Mr. Cockerell was stationed as Joint Magistrate at Karwi. He maintained his post there single-handed, saving the tahsili of Tarauhan (now Karwi). Meantime at Banda the troops mutined and the inhabitants fled. Mr. Cockerell had, however, refused to come into Banda till actually ordered to do so. When he did arrive he found that everybody had gone, and he was murdered at the Nawab of Banda's gate. The Nawab, if he did not actually instigate the murder, took no steps to stop it as he could easily have done. He was the son of the Reverend H. Cockerell of Northweald, Epping, and was born in 1831. He was educated at Marlborough and Haileybury and came to India in 1853.]

- 490.—1809—JAMIESON, W., Lieutenant. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Lieutenant W. Jamieson, 1st Battalion, 19th N. B. V., who was mortally wounded at the assault of the heights of Ragauli, Janry. 22nd, and died February 2nd 1809, aged 24 years. This monument was erected by the officers of the corps as a mark of respect and esteem for his exemplary valor and virtues.

[The tomb is at Ragauli in Tahsil Girwan. In December 1878 the inscription was lost but the zamindars afterwards recovered it. It was removed to the Church; those that follow come from the old cemetery.

When the officers of Shamsher Bahadur surrendered their fortresses Ajaigarh should have been amongst them; but Lachman Dowa, a zamindar seized it and it was necessary to send a column against him under Lieutenant-Colonel Martindell. He found the enemy posted on the heights of Ragauli in a very strong position, from which they were only driven at the cost of one officer and 28 men killed and two officers and 115 men wounded. Ajaigarh was captured on the 13th February. Of Lieutenant Jamieson Pogson writes that he was shot through both thighs. "Honorable, upright and accomplished, he possessed the esteem of all who knew him," writes Pogson, and quotes the "Vicar of Wakefield": "Go and if you fall, though distant, exposed, and unwept by those that love you—the most precious tears are those with which heaven bedews the tomb of a soldier."]

William Jamieson (so Dodwell and Miles) was the son of J. Jamieson, merchant at Glasgow, and was born in 1784. He joined the service in 1803.]

- 491.—1825—FANE, JULIA C. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Julia Charlotte, sixth daughter of William and Louisa Fane. She died on the 21st of August 1825, aged 5 months and 16 days.

[This is an instance where children who die in infancy are omitted by Burke, but there is no doubt that this is a child of William Fane, H. E. I. C. S., fifth son of the Hon. H. Fane, younger son of the 8th Earl of Westmoreland, who married Louisa Hay, daughter of Thomas Dashwood and sister of T. J. Dashwood (No. 61,1) and aunt of the two Lieutenants Dashwood killed at Lucknow in 1857 (Nos. 868 and 924). William Fane had eight other children, six daughters, including another Julia Charlotte, and two sons one of whom was in the C. S. He was ancestor of the present Fane's of Fulbeck Hall, county Lincoln, an estate purchased from the Rutland family by the first Earl of Westmoreland in 1622 for his younger son, Sir Francis Fane. The family is of Welsh extraction, going back to Howell ap Vane of Monmouthshire; and with more certainty to Henry Vane, circa 1450.

The Fane's, Dashwood's and Alexander's are much interconnected; Julia Charlotte Fane (this child's sister and namesake) married R. Alexander, whose father, James, was married to Charlotte Dashwood, sister of Mrs. Louisa Fane. To this family belongs E. B. Alexander, B. C. S.—a name well-known to district officials in the U. P. as that of the author of a certain "scheme." W. Fane joined the service in 1808 and was one of the first Haileybury students. In 1832 he was member of the Board of Revenue; he died at the Cape in 1832.]

501.—1857—VICTIMS OF THE MUTINY. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Horace Edmund Cockerell, Joint Magistrate of Banda, (also) of George Gwynne Benjamine, C. Benjamine, his wife, Henry Augustus Bruce, Chte. Anne Bruce and his mother John Lloyd (sic), the lamented victims of the Mutiny in the Bengal Army who were massacred at this place on the 15th and 16th June 1857, and whose remains were collected after the defeat of the insurgents by Major-General Whitlock's field division and interred in this spot on the 9th May 1858.

[The Mutiny in Banda began with an insurrection in certain villages of the district, in Parganas Baberu, Mau and Darsenda (now Kamasin). This was in early June; but Banda remained quiet after the district had gone. In Banda was a detachment of the 1st N. I. The Fatehpur fugitives reached Banda on the 8th June; and on the same day the English took refuge with the Nawab of Banda, Ali Bahadur. About the 14th the sepoys showed signs of disaffection, as did the jail guard and najibs. An attempt was made to suppress them with the assistance of the Nawab's forces, but it failed; for the Nawab's forces were even more rebellious than the sepoys. They joined the sepoys and all broke into open mutiny. The English managed to escape to Nagode. On the 15th June Mr. Cockerell, who had refused to leave Karwi and had preserved the tahsili and treasure, rode into Banda with the latter and was killed at the Nawab's gateway (cf. No. 489). On the 16th Mr. Bruce, in charge of the Nawab's villages, his mother, Captain Benjamine, commanding the Nawab's guards, his wife and her brother, Mr. Lloyd (all Eurasians) were discovered in the house of an old Arab named Maghribi Sahib. They were murdered by the retainers of the Nawab: their bodies were flung into a field.]

Inscription:—In memory of the British officers and men of the Madras Column, commanded by Major-General Whitlock, who fell in action or died during the campaign of 1858 and 1859, against the rebels and mutineers of the Bengal Army in Bundelkhand.

[Whitlock's Madras Column left Jubbulpore on the 17th February 1858, marched through Rewah to Saugor, and thence to Banda. He reached Kabrai on the 17th April 1858, fought a small action there and another sharply contested action at Goera Mughali and then occupied Banda. Among his troops were the 12th Lancers, the 8th Madras Europeans, the 2nd Hyderabad Contingent Cavalry, and guns of the R. A. and Madras Artillery. He sent detachments to punish the rebels and pacify the country, and occupied Karwi. A garrison was left there and at Banda and the column left the district in September.]

The family subsequently succeeded (circa 1750) to the estate of Thurs on, in Co. Haddington.

John Hunter was born in 1781, joined the service in 1801, and became Lieutenant-Colonel in 1830. He fought at the siege of Bhurtport, was wounded, mentioned in despatches and obtained his majority after the siege.]

He was struck down by the sun, and died alone and untended in the field of M. A. Pundu Perch Banda (sic); eighteen months afterwards his remains were collected and interred on this spot."

Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness sake.

[Nowgong was garrisoned by detachments of the Jhansi regiments. They broke on the 10th June. The officers could only retreat; those of them who did not perish on the road—in various villages of Sihonda (now Girwan) and Badausa—ultimately reached Banda. Some of them were taken prisoners by the zamindars of Goera Mughali, who brought them to the Nawab. He, however, treated them kindly, and sent them to Nagode. "They (the fugitives) had had to leave some of their friends, struck down by the sun," such as Lieutenant Barber.

Sacred to the memory of Lieut.-Col. E. C. Legh, C. B., H. M. 97th Regt. He died at Banda, June 3rd, 1859. This monument was erected by his brother officers as a mark of their respect and esteem.

[There are here three inscriptions: two to Lieutenant-Colonel Legh, one by his wife and one by his brother officers, and one to his son. Edmund Cornwall Legh (1821-1859) was 6th son of G. J. Legh, of High Legh. He married Julia, daughter of Neville Parker of New Brunswick, and left a son. Neville Edmund Cornwall, (not Edward as in inscription), born 1854, and a daughter. The family traces its descent to Oswald de Lega of East Hall, Cheshire; the date is not given but it was 11 generations before 1451, so that the family must be extremely old. The succession of High Legh has been unbroken since at least the 7th generation.]

MANIPUR, NEAR KALINJAR.

515.—1812.—MACMANUS, J. Inscription:—To the memory of James MacManus, late of H. M.’s 8th or K. R. I. L. Drge., who died 12th Febr. 1812, aged 29 years.

[This tomb is in a cemetery in Manipur, an “island” village of native state territory about 2 miles north of Kalinjar. It contains twenty one tombs of which two are rather larger than the rest: one of the nineteen has the above inscription. It is undoubtedly the cemetery of those that fell in the siege of Kalinjar in 1812.

Kalinjar is a famous old fort at the south-east extremity of the Bundelkhand plain on a hill 1,230 feet above sea level, with steep and in the upper part almost perpendicular sides. It is mentioned as a famous place in the Mahabharata and its authentic history dates back to the early Chandels who made it their capital and the “King of Kalinjar” is mentioned as early as 978 A. D. It was attacked successively by Muhammad Ghori (1202 A. D.), Humayun (1530 A. D.), Sher Shah (1554 A. D.) and others. It was held first by Musalmans and then by Baghels and finally gave name to a sirkar in the time of Akbar. It was subsequently taken by the Bundelas and passed first to Hardeo Sah of Panna, and then to the Chaubes, of whom one was Kiledar (Kaimji). At the time of the British occupation it was still held by his descendants. One of them was confirmed in his possession of Kalinjar. He, however, ignored the British rule: Kalinjar became a mere resort of outlaws and plunderers; in 1812 it was decided to capture it. The force assembled under Colonel Martindell consisted of a squadron of the 8th Light Dragons (now 8th K. R. I. Hussars), five companies of the 53rd (now Shropshire L. I.), six battalions of Native Infantry and four squadrons of Native Cavalry. Guns were pulled up a hill 780 feet high (a tremendous feat on a Bundelkhand hill) and the investment was commenced on the 18th January. It was bombarded: and on the 1st February the breach was reported practicable. But the wall which had been breached was on an abrupt cliff which had to be scaled; and this was found impossible. The losses were heavy, Captain Fraser and Lieutenant Nioce of the 53rd were killed: the regiment also lost 16 men killed, and 10 officers and 114 men wounded; the total loss was about 200. Next day, however, the Chaubes offered to surrender and evacuated the fort on the 13th February.

The larger tombs are doubtless those of the two officers.]

- 516.—1859—(1) EVANS, W. (2) LIMUEL, C. Inscription :—
In memory of William Evans, Chief Engineer, and Charles Limuel, Resident Engineer, who were murdered by rebels at Entowah near the 80th milestone from Allahabad on the 26th February 1859.

[From enquiries made in the neighbourhood, the following facts were discovered. No such place as "Entowah" is known. There is however a village called Itwan which would be about 80 miles from Allahabad; and this is undoubtedly the place meant, as an old map, which spells the word in this way, proves. An old man in Man kpur stated that one Ranwant Singh, a Baghel Thakur of Rewah, remained in arms for a considerable period, and murdered some Englishmen both at Itwan and Kasauli (in Rewah state). He also stated that he could remember the body of an Englishman being brought from Itwan and buried in Manikpur, but does not remember his name. As Itwan is close to the railway line (East Indian Railway) it is possible that these gentlemen were railway Engineers.]

KALINJAR, TAHSIL GIRWAN.

- 517.—1818—WAUCHOPE, J. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of John Wauchope,¹ Esquire, of Niddrie,² near Edinburgh, Collector of Bundelkhand 1809 and 1810 A.D., and Judge of Bundelkhand in 1818 A.D. He successfully exerted himself to gain affections,³ and promote the happiness of those over whom he was placed, and supported by his personal conduct and character the honour and interests of Government by whom his valuable services have been frequently and most honourably acknowledged. Mr. Wauchope¹ was of the ancient family of Neddery² near Edinburgh, and he departed this life at Kalinjar⁴ on the 12th August 1818, in the 36th year of his age.

[The tomb of John Wauchope is situated within the Fort at Kalinjar. (For some account of the fort vide no. 493). The present inscription is a restoration, and not a very intelligent one, as the obvious errors prove. The original inscription was considerably longer and was defaced when a Sikh regiment was stationed at Kalinjar. Führer reproduces its remains: it will be seen that the major part of the present epitaph (from "he successfully" to the end) was only the final part of the old epitaph.

"Age

Alike Emin.....
In his private and.....
He was beloved of his kin.....
Amiable and affectionate.....
Exclusive benevolence and.....
And as his.....
Was devoted to the exercise.....
His public conduct was.....

Of the important duties with which.....
With distinguished ability and.....
And noble integrity and disinterest.....
He successfully exerted himself," &c., &c. (as in present inscription, inserting a "the" before "affections," reading "respectfully" for "frequently" and spelling "Wauchope," "Niddrie" and "Kalinjar" correctly.)

Conjecture as to the exact phraseology is immaterial: sufficient remains to show that the epitaph was of the long and stately kind common at the period.

John Wauchope is celebrated firstly for his settlement of the Bundelkhand revenue: and secondly for his political achievements.

As regards the first he was given instructions of a nature that were bound to result in, and actually produced, an enhancement of not less than 29 per cent. Good seasons made it possible to collect it, and Mr. Wauchope obtained, of course, great credit for his settlement. He was collector of Bundelkhand from 1808 to 1810, and after two years at Allahabad, returned as judge and magistrate of Bundelkhand with political powers (1812). In 1813 he became Superintendent of Political affairs and Agent to the Governor General in Bundelkhand and in June 1818, Agent to the Governor General in Rohilkhand and Saugor. During this interval, he made engagements with Gobind Rao of Jalaun (1817), Rao Ram Chand of Jhansi (1817), and the Rajas of Datia (1818), Samphar (1817), and Orcha (1812): and finally with the Rani of Saugor. The sole treaty chiefs in Bundelkhand at the present day are Datia, Samphar and Orcha; the rest hold under sanads and ikramnamas. It is curious that this epitaph should wrongly assert that Wauchope was Judge of Bundelkhand in 1818, and omit all references to his political posts. It was probably mentioned in the old inscription, if from the fragments of the first two lines preserved by Führer, we may conjecture "Agent for political affairs) in Bu(ndelkhand.)"

John Wauchope was the son of Andrew Wauchope of Niddrie, and Alice Baird, his wife, born in 1781 at Herdmanston and arrived in India in 1800. To this family belongs Major-General Andrew Wauchope, killed at Magersfontein in 1899. The family, now extinct in the male line after a life of over 5 centuries, dates back to 1380; the Wauchope's were hereditary Bailies to the Keiths, Marischals of Scotland, afterwards Earl Marischals. From them they obtained the lands of Niddrie Marischal. (Cadell sneers at the reliance placed by the Board on Mr. Wauchope's "local knowledge" of Bundelkhand, which he supposes had been acquired "in a few months." He was apparently unaware that Mr. Wauchope had already served in lower grades for two years in Bundelkhand (1805—7) and doubtless possessed his fair share of "local knowledge.")

NEAR UNCHADIIH, TAHSIL KARWI.

518.—1865—BUYERS, W., Revd. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of the Revd. W. Buyers, missionary for 30 years in India, who died near this place on the 4th October 1865, aged 63 years.

"I have waited for thy salvation, O Lord

"Grata quies patria sed et omnis terra sepulchrum."

[William Buyers (1804-1865) was born at Dundee. He studied at the Missionary College, Hoxton, and was appointed to Benares. He was ordained in 1831 at Woolwich. He arrived in Calcutta in October 1831 and at Benares in January 1832. In 1833 he married Eliza Anne Walker, of Aberdeen. In 1840 he took sick leave to England where he arrived in 1841. He returned to India in June and arrived in Benares in September 1843. At the end of 1845 he was again compelled to go home on account of ill-health. It was not thought advisable to send him out again: but he returned at his own expense to Benares, leaving Mrs. Buyers at home. In 1850 he was re-engaged by the L. M. S. and Mrs. Buyers and her family rejoined him. Mrs. Buyers died at Benares in 1857; there is a tablet to her in the L. M. S. Church there. In 1859 Mr. Buyers went to Almora, remaining there from 1859 to 1861, when he returned to Benares. In 1863 he resigned his connection with the Society and died at Unchadih in 1868. Unchadih is a jungle village near the line of rail. At one time it was a railway settlement and possessed a station, marks of which, and of various bungalows, still remain. The tomb, which is actually inside the railway fencing, close to the metals and also to the old station, was erected by the Rev. W. Buyers' son, who was a railway Engineer.]

519.—1869—BATES, W. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of No. 2994, Pt. W. Bates, H. M.'s 50th Regiment, died at Oonchadeeh, the 13th day of August 1869, aged 39 years.

[This tomb is in a cemetery containing several graves, but no other inscription, in the jungle close to the East Indian Railway line, and less than a mile from Unchadih. The wire fencing has now disappeared, but the stone in which it was fixed remains. Legend has it that some troops once came here from Jubbulpore in cholera camp. One could hardly imagine a less suitable place for a cholera camp in the rains than Unchadhi, but possibly it was less obviously objectionable at that time, when it was a railway settlement, than it is now.]

SITE UNCERTAIN.

520.—1833—SINCLAIR, P. C., Captain the Hon. Inscription :—

This stone is sacred to the memory of the Honorable Patrick Campbell Sinclair, Brevet Captain in the 70th Regiment, N. I., who died at this place on the 13th March 1834, in the 34th year of his age. Erected in grateful affection by his afflicted widow. (B. O.)

[This tomb is not now traceable so far as I have been able to discover, and the inscription is taken from Führer. As he only gives the cemetery as "Banda cemetery" and there are several cemeteries at Banda the task of discovery is made none the easier. This officer is undoubtedly the 4th son of Sir James Sinclair, 7th baronet of Mey and 12th Earl of Caithness: he married Isabella, a daughter of Major-General M'Gregor. He was appointed cadet in 1817, ensign in 1818 and lieutenant in 1825. The family is exceedingly ancient. Sir James was descended from George Sinclair of Mey, Chancellor of the Diocese of Caithness, and third son of the 4th Earl of Caithness. The first Earl of Caithness in this family was William Sinclair, Earl of Orkney and Chancellor of Scotland, who exchanged the Earldom of Orkney and the Lordship of Nithsdale for the Earldom of Caithness and the lands and castle of Ravenscraig in Fife. Before this the Earldom of Caithness was held, as far back as the 11th century, by the Norse Earls of Orkney, who held Orkney from the King of Norway and Caithness from the King of Scotland: it subsequently passed to the Earls of Angus and of Strathern respectively; then to the Crown, the Stewarts, the Crichtons and the Sinclairs in succession. The Sinclair Earls of Caithness are descended from the Sinclair's of Rosslyn, one of whom (great-grandfather of the first Earl) married Isabella, daughter of Malise, Earl of Strathern, Caithness and Orkney. It is a far cry from the Scottish and Norse Earls of the 11th century and from Caithness and Orkney to this forgotten tomb of the 19th century in Banda. When it is added that the present Earl's residence is given as North Dakota, U. S. A., the "ship under sail or, for Caithness," which appears in the family's arms seems peculiarly appropriate.]

KAITHA CEMETERY (TAHSIL RATH).

521.—1810—CAR, S. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Sarah Car, infant of H. Car, U.M.S. 1st Battallion, 17th Regiment. Born December 10th, A.D. 1809, and died June 8th, 1810.

[One result of British policy as regards the Bundelkhandi chiefs was the establishment of several cantonments in different places—Kaitha, Supa, Kalpi, Taraunan, Kartal, Kunch and Banda. The relations between the British Government and the treaty states—Rewah, Orchha, Dattiya and Samthar—were based on friendship and protection against the Marathas: of the other, or sanad, chiefs many held lands included in the assignment of 35 lakhs of revenue ceded by the Peshwa under the Treaty of Bassein. It was a fundamental principle of British politics to confirm such chiefs in the possession of such possession of such part of their territories as they held under Ali Bahadur's government, on condition of their fidelity to the British power. Some merely marauding chiefs were also so confirmed, with a view to pacifying the country. This explains the large number of states and small jagirs in this part of India. There are some 28 such states besides others that have lapsed, the best known being (besides the four already mentioned) Panna, Charkari and Ajaigarh. Obviously to keep the peace amongst all these states, many of them used to a state of continual warfare, troops and cantonments were necessary: such cantonments have already been met with at Banda and will be found subsequently at Kalpi and Kunch. Kaitha was a cantonment from 1812 to 1828, which explains the majority of these tombs.]

[Sir J. B. Hearsey in his autobiography mentions a Lieutenant Rogers, Adjutant of the 6th B. C., who died "during the rainy season" of 1815. "He was seized with fever and died raving mad in three days;" he was also a great tiger-slayer. This may be Lieutenant Byers and the name given by Sir J. Hearsey be due to a slip of the pen, especially as he was succeeded as Adjutant by Hearsey himself, so that there was no time for another Adjutant to intervene.

J. L. Byers, son of J. Byers, Customs officer, was born in 1785 at Bowness, Cumberland. He joined the service in 1805.]

- 541.—1831—(1) LATOUCHE, F., Mrs.—(2) LATOUCHE, C. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Frances, the beloved wife of Captain LaTouche, Major of Brigade in Bundelkhand, who departed this life upon the 22nd July A. D. 1831, aged 20 years 11 months and 20 days. Most deeply deplored by her disconsolate husband and relatives. Sacred to the memory of Cecil, the son of Captain LaTouche, who departed this life upon the 2nd July A. D. 1831, aged 1 year, 6 months and 18 days. Most deeply lamented.

[Sir J. J. Digges LaTouche has kindly given me the following information about the members of the LaTouche family. "All these LaTouches," he writes, "are descended from a Huguenot who left France on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, fought at the Battle of the Boyne as a lieutenant under King William III and settled in Dublin. He was called David Dignes de LaTouche and had two sons; the eldest dropped the 'Dignes,' the younger son, James, anglicized the name into Digges LaTouche. Cornwallis LaTouche (cf. No. 792) was the brother of William LaTouche of Bellevue, Co. Wicklow, whose widow is still alive. He and Peter LaTouche (who lies buried in the Almora cemetery, No. 847) and also Captain LaTouche belong to the elder branch.

William Digges LaTouche (No. 435) who was killed in the massacre at Cawnpore was first cousin of my father and a brother of Henry D. LaTouche who in 1868 came out as a railway Engineer and built the bridge over the Chambal. He then went to south India and retired, and died at Ross in Herefordshire some years ago. William was not married. The name of the man killed at Cawnpore is, I think, correctly given on the windows of the Memorial Church at Cawnpore as William Digges LaTouche. (Also in No. 435; it is incorrectly given in the tablet No. 422). There were also a number of LaTouches (not Digges) on the Bombay side....."

It is clear from Burke that this Captain LaTouche is the Peter LaTouche buried at Almora; the dates in Dodwell and Miles also support this view. Burke mentions the death of Mrs. Frances LaTouche and her son Cecil, giving the dates, and stating that they died at Kaitha. She was daughter of Brigadier-General W. G. Maxwell, C. B., of Dalswinton, Dumfries, and married Peter LaTouche in 1829. His second wife was Fraulein Ellen Beständig, of Göttingen.]

- 545.—1848—MUIR, M. F., B.C.S. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Mungo Fairlie Muir, Bengal Civil Service, died 30th May 1841, aged 26 years.

(M. F. Muir (1815-1841) was third son of William Muir, and brother of John James and William Muir, all in the Civil Service. John Muir, the eldest, is most famous as a Sanskrit scholar ; his great work is "original Sanskrit Texts on the Origin and History of the People of India." Sir William Muir, the youngest, held many important posts both in the North-Western Provinces and the Government of India and was Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces from 1868-1874, Finance member from 1874-76, member of the Indian Council 1876-1885, Principal and Vice-Chancellor of Edinburgh University 1885-1902, and author of many books, mostly on Islam. Four of his sons also served in India—the eldest: William, in the Artillery and in the Political service retiring as a Colonel ; the second, John Fairlie, in the Bombay C.S. ; the third, Archibald Mungo, was first in the Native Cavalry, and then in the Political service, dying as resident at Khatmandu ; whilst the last Charles Wemyss, served in the Afghan, Soudan and Burmese wars. M. F. Muir was at Haileybury in 1835 ; at the time of his death he was Assistant Magistrate at Hamirpur.

By the similarity of the crest, and the identity of the motto, Sir J. F. Muir of the firm of Findlay Muir and Co. would appear to be of the same family ; but the family, which comes from north Ayrshire, has many branches. Mr. G. P. F. Muir, C.S., son of J. F. Muir and grandson of Sir William, is the present representative of the family in these provinces, and to him I am indebted for the family details in this note.]

- 546.—1843-44—OFFICERS, 3rd Regiment. Inscription :—To the memory of the Officers of Her Majesty's 3rd or Buffs Regiment, who were killed in action, or who died when on service in the State of Gwalior in 1843-44. Captain Donald Stewart, killed in action at Punniar, on the 29th December 1843, aged 45 ; Captain Richard Nicholson Magrath, died of his wounds in camp at Gwalior on the 14th January 1844, aged 33 ; Surgeon Alexander Macqueen, M. D., died in camp at Gwalior on the 24th January 1844, aged 50, Captain Thomas Chatterton, died in camp at Seundah on the 27th January 1844, aged 45. This table is inscribed by their brother officers.

[These officers and the men mentioned in the next inscription lost their lives in a war which sprang out of a palace intrigue. On the death of Jankoji Scindia of Gwalior in 1843 his widow, a girl of 12, adopted a boy of 8. Lord Ellenborough and the girl-queen had rival nominees for regent. Lord Ellenborough's was appointed, but the queen dismissed him and handed over the Government to her own nominee. The Governor General insisted on his dismissal and ordered the resident to leave Gwalior, but the regent had won over the overgrown Gwalior army of 40,000 men, and disturbances arose which had to be put down by force. Sir Hugh Gough fought two battles in one day of which the second was Punniar, and that was the end of the war. One of its results was the raising of the Gwalior contingent. The 8rd are now the Buffs (East Kent) Regiment.

It was their 1st battalion who fought at Punniar. They have the four "Marlborough" honours, Dettingen, all the Peninsular honours from the Douro to Toulouse, Punniar, Sebastopol, Taku Forts, South Africa 1879, and Chitral. The old 8rd Fort was raised in 1804 as the Duke of York and Albany's Maritime regiment of Foot. In 1889, or shortly after, it was incorporated in the 2nd Foot Guards, and the old 4th (Prince George of Denmark's Regiment) became the 8rd. It was first called the Buffs in 1708.]

Who were killed in the station and district of Allahabad, between the 6th and 10th days of June 1857, by sepoys of the 6th Regiment, Native Infantry, and other mutineers and rebels. This monument is erected by the surviving residents of Allahabad."

[The troops at Allahabad consisted of the 6th Native Infantry, of whom one company was in the Fort; a wing of the Ferozepore Regiment of Sikhs under Lieutenant Brasier, also in the Fort; two troops of the 3rd Oude Irregulars under Lieutenant Alexander, divided up into jail and treasury guards and night patrols. There were also 60 European invalid artillerymen,

On the 5th June a company of the 6th Native Infantry with two 9 pounders (under Lieutenants Hicks and Harward) were sent to Daraganj to meet the 13th Irregulars, supposed to be marching from Benares on Allahabad. This step was against the views of many: and it was at Daraganj that the mutiny first broke out. The sepoys seized the guns: Lieutenant Harward galloped off to Lieutenant Alexander who had some of his cavalry at Alopibagh. He led his men after the guns and charged them, but was shot through the breast in the volley that met the charge: only 3 of his men followed him, the rest joined the mutineers. Harward sent a note to Brasier in the Fort which explained matters: but it did not reach the others. In the 6th Mess House 17 officers, including 8 unposted cadets, were assembled, a bugle call sounded in the lines, and the officers hurried there. As they came up they were shot: 7 officers and 8 cadets were killed. That night 81 Europeans were murdered by the prisoners released from the jail and the city badmashes. Brasier with his Sikhs and the Europeans disarmed the company of the 6th Native Infantry. On the 7th Neill arrived, and at once set about restoring order.

Of the names here mentioned the officers, ensigns and sergeants mentioned as doing duty with the 6th were killed, except Cheek, in the lines after the treacherous bugle call. Cheek was wounded and taken prisoner: during his captivity he adjured a fellow prisoner (a Native Christian) not to recant when pressed to do so. He died in the Fort after Neill's troops had rescued the prisoners. Captain Birch and Lieutenant Innes were two of those who refused to enter the Fort. The death of Lieutenant Alexander has already been related. The last four men mentioned were killed in the district, Mr. Thomas and Mr. Lancaster while trying to escape to Barwari. Mrs. Ryves was with a party of railway officers who were besieged for two days on the top of a tank at Barwari by a mob till relieved by a party of a 3rd Oude Irregulars. Mrs. Ryves died immediately on being removed from the tank. The details regarding the deaths of the rest are unknown. In the words of the Mutiny Narrative: "It may be as well that the details of but few of so many murders are known with certainty."

John Plunkett (so the services B. A. List) was son of W. Plunkett, Excise Officer, born in 1816. He joined the army in 1835.

Robert Stewart was son of R. Stewart, a Calcutta merchant, born in India in 1828. He joined the service in 1848.

George Harry Hawes, son of W. Hawes, was born at Colgong in Bengal in 1831.

Philip Shirley Codd, son of Captain Codd, His Majesty's Service, was born at Karnal in 1839.

Marshall Deverell Smith, son of E. Smith, merchant, was born at Calcutta in 1838.

Arthur Marcus Hill Cheek, son of O. Cheek, solicitor, was born at Evesham in 1840, and educated at Cheltenham Grammar School.

George Stewart Pringle was 4th son of W. A. Pringle, B. C. S. His grandfather, father, three uncles, three brothers and a cousin all served in India, the most distinguished of them being his uncle R. K. Pringle, who was Commissioner of Soinde. This branch of the Pringles (a name which is supposed to be a corruption of "Pelerin") dates back to Robert Hop-Pringle, Esquire to James Earl of Douglas at the battle of Otterburn in 1388.

C. G. Way was son of the Revd. C. J. Way of Spaynes Hall, Essex, born in 1838. He was educated at Marlborough. The family is a junior branch of the Ways of Denham, who date back to the Tudors.

Edward Ernest Beaumont, son of E. Beaumont, and ward of Sir H. Lytton Bulwer, was born at Southwell, Essex in 1838.

Edward Morris Smith, son of N. T. Smith, was born at Eltham, Kent in 1839.

KYDGANJ CEMETERY.

- 551.—1798—HEARSEY, A. W., Lieutenant-Colonel. Inscription:—To the memory of Lieutenant-Colonel A. W. Hearsey, who departed this life on 10th July 1798, aged 46 years. This monument is erected in token of regard by his affectionate widow Charlotte Hearsey.

[This tomb is reported to be untraceable now and the inscription is taken from Führer's list.]

The Hearsey family is very ancient. A member of the family, a Cumberland Squire, was "out in" 1745 for the Pretender at Colloden. One of his sons was a London merchant; his second son Andrew had two sons, the younger of whom, also Andrew, was in command of an East Indiaman. He died in 1778; his son was Andrew Wilson Hearsey. Born in 1752, he entered the service of the H. E. I. C. in 1765. He fought in 1768 in the raid from Bengal on the Northern Circars, which resulted in their cession to the Company. In 1780 he went with Captain Popham's force which marched to Colonel Goddard's support, and on the way took the forts of Lahar and Gwalior, the latter supposed impregnable. After Gwalior Hearsey was recalled and sent with Colonel Pearse's force down the coast line to Madras to assist in its defence against Haidar Ali. Hearsey was the column's baggage master. Pearse joined Eyre Coote at Pulicat after Porto Novo, and Hearsey was present at the indecisive action of Pollilore and the victory of Sholingar. Hearsey was now baggage master of both armies with over 40,000 camp followers under him. At Pollilore he repulsed three cavalry attacks on the baggage. He was at Vellore and the fighting round Cuddalore. In 1780 he went to England to support a claim of his against the Company for certain perquisites, but in vain. He married Miss Crane in England in 1787. He returned to India, and in 1790 again went with a Bengal column into Madras. He was present at the captures of Coimbatore, Dindigul and Palaghat: at the battle of Calicut: at the sieges of Bangalore and Seringapatam and the battle of Arikeru. He became a Major in 1794—after 29 years' service, most of it in the field!—and Lieutenant-Colonel and first commandant of the Allahabad Fort in 1797. He had one son, Lieutenant-General Sir John Bennet Hearsey, of Mutiny fame, and three daughters who married officers in the army.

The Hearseys have long been connected with India. Captain Andrew Hearsey commanded an East Indiaman: his son was Colonel A. W. Hearsey. By his marriage with Miss Charlotte Crane (1787) Colonel Hearsey had one son, the famous Sir J. B. Hearsey, K. C. B., and Lieutenant-General, of Mutiny fame; and three daughters:

- (1) Mrs. Charlotte Bradshaw, wife of Colonel Paris Bradshaw who did good service on the Nepal frontier and died in 1821 when on his way to take up the post of Resident at Lucknow. His son died a General and a K. H.,

- (2) Mrs. Marion Salmon, wife of General W. B. Salmon ;
 (3) Mrs. Sophia Hall, wife of Colonel F. Hall, killed in Chiff. His son Colonel J. F. W. D. Hall served in India and was a famous tiger-slayer.

Sir J. B. Hearsey had a long glorious career, into which I need not now enter. He married his kinswoman Harriet (daughter of Major H. Y. Hearsey) in 1832; and by her had a family of four sons and three daughters.

- (1) John (1838-1863), A. D. C. to his father and with him when he captured the first mutineer, Mangal Panday; he had a son, John Hampton who died young (Captain, 2nd V. B. S. Wales Borderers).
 (2) Andrew (1839-1896), also A. D. C. to his father in 1857, who served as a volunteer with Havelock. He married Harriet, daughter of Captain W. M. Hearsey.
 (3) and (4) two other sons who died young (one at Sandhurst; the other was in the 19th Hussars.)
 (5) Mrs. Harriet Carew, wife of Captain G. O. B. Carew, C. I. E., of the late Indian Navy: her daughter married Mr. W. L. Wyllie, A. R. A.
 (6) Mrs. Amelia Hearsey, wife of Mr. L. D. Hearsey of Lakhimpur.
 Sir J. B. Hearsey's second wife was Miss Emma Rumball and by her he had two sons: Captain C. J. R. Hearsey, 9th Lancers, killed in the Afghan war; and C. C. Hearsey of the Indian Marine.

There is also the other branch of Hearseys connected with this branch; viz. Major Hyder Young Hearsey, son of Captain H. P. Hearsey, who fought under both Perron and Thomas: with Lord Lake at Agra, Delhi and Deig, in the Gurkha war and at Bhurtপুর, and explored Chinese Tartary. He married a Princess of Cambay, sister of Colonel W. L. Gardner's wife. His sons were Captain W. M. Hearsey, Captain J. B. Hearsey and Hyder Hearsey. All three were in the Oudh service, and the first two served in the Mutiny, the first at Lucknow, the second at Sitapur, whence he managed to escape, and both, later, in the Intelligence Department. The third died before the Mutiny. Captain W. M. Hearsey was the father of Mr. L. D. Hearsey of Lakhimpur, Rheri.]

To-day and to-morrow.

To-day, man's dressed in gold and silver bright ;
 Wrapp'd in a shroud before to-morrow night.
 To-day he's fed on delicious food ;
 To-morrow dead, unable to do good.
 To-day he's nice, and scorns to feed on crumbs ;
 To-morrow he's himself a dish for worms.
 To-day he's honoured and in vast esteem ;
 To-morrow, not a beggar envies him.
 To-day he rises from the velvet bed ;
 To-morrow, lies in one that's made of lead.
 To-day, his house though large he thinks too small ;
 To-morrow, can command no house at all.
 To-day, has forty servants at his gate ;
 To-morrow, scorned, not one of them will wait.
 To-day, perfumed as sweet as any rose ;
 To-morrow, stinks in every body's nose ;
 To-day, is grand, majestic, all delight ;
 Ghastly and pale, before to-morrow night.
 True, as the scripture says, man's life's a span ;
 The present moment is the life of man.

Elizabeth Bull, January 31st, 1826.

[Walter Scott, M. D. (1817-1844), was the third (second surviving) son of Walter Scott of Wauchope. The family, now Macmillan-Scott, is descended through a long series of Walters from a son of Walter Scott, laird of Buccleuch, and great-great-grandfather of the 1st Earl of Buccleuch.]

[E. J. Boileau was son of J. T. Boileau of Dublin, and was born in 1820. He joined the service in 1837, fought at Jellalabad, and was mentioned in despatches for the attack on Jagdalah. Many of this family have served in India. It dates back to Nicholas Boileau, Lord of Castellan and St. Croix in Languedoc (circa 1598) and traditionally to Etienne Boileau, grand provost of Paris in 1255. The grandson of Nicholas Boileau fled to Holland at the revocation of the Edict of Nantes and thence to England.]

[Jhansi was taken over by the doctrine of "lapse" in 1854, on the death of Ganga Dhar Rao, the Raja. His widow the Rani, Lachmi Bai by name, was given a pension of Rs. 5,000 a month and 10 lakhs' worth of her husband's property, but she was aggrieved by the refusal of Government to allow her to adopt an heir to her husband and in vain pleaded her cause in England. She had also many other minor causes of irritation, most of them trivial, and in some of them at all events she was undoubtedly in the wrong. She was consequently in a state of mind to welcome any chance of revenge and possessed of a masculine spirit well fitted to carry it out.

As soon as the Mutiny broke out she began to intrigue with the garrison; and also actually misled Captain Skene, the Superintendent, into allowing her to raise troops for her own defence. On the 6th the 12th N. I. mutinied: by this time most of the Europeans had however taken refuge in the Fort. The regiment shot Captain Dunlop, Lieutenants Campbell and Turnbull and Q.-M. Sergeant Newton and his family. The rest of the day was spent in releasing the prisoners, incendiarism and pillage. On the 7th Mr. Scott and the Messrs. Parcell were sent by Captain Skene to the Rani to request her protection when the party left the Fort. They were seized by her troops and sent by the Rani to the mutineers' lines where they were murdered. Mr. Andrews also left the Fort and was murdered by the Rani's own servants. The Fort was attacked on the 8th without success; but Lieutenant Powis was killed by some natives inside who tried to open the gates to the mutineers, and Captain Gordon shot in the assault. He had been "the life and soul of the garrison" and his loss was severely felt.

Captain Skene then offered to treat: and the mutineers swore by the most sacred oaths that they should be allowed to depart in safety. The terms were accepted, and the besieged were taken to the Jokhan Bagh outside the city walls. There on an order from the Risaldar of the mutineers, they were massacred. Captain Skene was cut down by the Jail darogha. Their bodies were left exposed for three days and then thrown, the men into one and the women and children into another gravel-pit, and covered over.

A. Skene was the son of Dr. C. Skene, born at 1817 in Aberdeen. He joined the service in 1837.

Francois Jaques Burgess was the son of F. Burgess, barrister-at-law and Chief Commissioner of Police for Birmingham, born in 1822. He joined the service in 1842.

Francois David Gordon (1821-1857) was eldest son of Mr. M. F. Gordon of Abergeldie, of a family descended from Sir Alexander Gordon, second son of the 1st Earl of Huntley. This particular branch of the Gordons dates back to Sir Adam Gordon, circa 1805.

[The 3rd Europeans after fighting their way to Jhansi with Sir H. Rose were left in garrison there, and had a great deal of work to do, mostly in small detachments, in pacifying Jhansi and other Bundelkhand districts. Their record in Central India included the siege and capture of Rathgarh, the relief of Saugor, the capture of Garhakota, the siege and storm of Jhansi, the battles of Barodia, Madanpur, the Betwa, Kunch, Golauti and Kalpi, and the battle and storm of Gwalior. They were raised in 1853, and are now the 2nd Battalion, the Prince of Wales' Leinster Regiment (Royal Canadians).]

[I thought at first that "younger" was part of the name. A chance discovery in Burke, however, coupled with the fact that no "Younger" could be traced in the 39th Madras N. I. or any where else in the East India register of the date, showed me that it merely was a (now somewhat antiquated) synonym for "junior." Burke mentions John Sinclair, "39th Madras N. I., born 2nd May 1822, killed while gallantly commanding the left wing, 3rd regiment, Hyderabad contingent at the capture of Jhansi, 5th April 1858;" so there can be no doubt of the identification. He was the son of Sir John Sinclair, Bart., and grandson of John Sinclair, of Barrock. [This tomb is North-east of Rangaon village. There is also an inscription in a script which Mr. Thomas, Librarian of the India office (to whom I showed it), told me was Tamil of a kind. It was not entirely decipherable and apparently quite untranslatable. How it came to be on this gunner's tomb, is an insoluble mystery. So far as it was possible to make anything of it, it appeared to reproduce the English inscription.]

- 583.—1810—ALEXANDER, Mrs. Inscription :—(Destroyed).

[Mr. Silberrad reports that in 1900 the words "Catholica Romana" "26th December 1810" and "Dien te sauve" were legible but even these have now disappeared. It is however known to be the tomb of the wife of Major Joseph Alexander, in the service of Gwalior. This officer only appears in history once when Colonel Stephen Nation (no. 475) marched from Kaitha to protect the Raja of Tehri against aggressions by Gwalior troops under Alexander's command (1822). His wife died at Khajuria, 3 miles away: his descendants still own a fagir at Jaria, 2 miles away. There is also a tomb without inscription to his (Major Alexander's) son, Napoleon, and (at Jaria) is the tomb of an unknown French captain, one of Alexander's subordinates. The Sindwaha tombs are in a garden near the village.

[In 1804 Colonel Fawcett, commanding in Bundelkhand, sent 7 companies to reduce the fort of Omanta Malaya, 5 miles from Kunch. The Kiladar sent for help to Amir Khan who was plundering Mau and Iriohh. He marched in person and sent his Pindaris to plunder the camp, and attacked the British in their trenches with three bodies of men. The British formed square, but were attacked in front and rear and defeated, with the loss of 5 guns, 2 companies of N. I. and about 50 European artillerymen. The British then retreated.

Some reinforcements from Kalpi were also attacked and overpowered. Amir Khan plundered Kalpi and a month later he was severely defeated by Colonel Shepherd. Captain W. Feade joined the service in 1785 and became a Captain in 1802. He had fought in the 2nd Mysore War and at the siege of Gwalior. Lieutenant Robert Morris, son of Mrs. Mary Morris, born at Dublin 1777 (father's name not given), joined the service in 1794 and had fought at Aligarh, Delhi, Agra and Gwalior.]

M. MARGAYAN, TAHSIL KALPI.

- 593.—1778(?)—CRAWFORD, J., CAPTAIN. Inscription:—

برای یادگار نیست که بتاریخ سوم ماه جون سنه ۱۷۰۰ ع کتبان چیمس
کرافورد صاحب به سنه بست و نه سال در اینجا وفات یافت *

[This tomb is a large masonry structure, East of Margayan (Margawan or Margaon.) Führer read the date 1790; the Collector of Jalaun informed me that M. Matin-uz-zaman Khan, Deputy Collector, thought it was 1768. I am of opinion that the true date is 1778. According to the Deputy Collector's report, there can be no doubt of the 8; the third figure is badly damaged, but from what he says, it might as well be a 7 as anything else, and Führer who saw it thirteen years before M. Matin-uz-zaman, and was a professed antiquarian, read it as a 7. Apart from these arguments, we have firstly the negative fact that an Englishman would hardly be in the neighbourhood of Kalpi in 1758, the year after Plassey, and the positive fact, that a Captain James Crawford did die near this spot about the 8th June 1778.

In 1778 occurred Warren Hastings' trans-continental expedition from Bengal to the assistance of Bombay against the Marathas. In the course of that expedition Colonel Leslie seized Kalpi. Philip Francis who had been opposed to the expedition all along, never lost a chance of criticizing it adversely, and Hastings through it. On the 22nd June Colonel Leslie sent to Calcutta some despatches from Bombay, urging him to hasten west. Incidentally, they mentioned the news just received, of General Burgoyne's surrender in the American War. Francis commented that in one breath they told one English army to proceed across one continent, and stated that another English army, which had attempted a passage across another continent, had been forced to capitulate. He pointed out that this was an evil omen, and pressed for the recall of the troops. He also quoted a private letter from Leslie's camp describing the privations that the troops had suffered, and stating that Crawford had died on the first march out of Kalpi, raving mad for want of a simple drink of water, and more than hinted that Leslie or Hastings had suppressed the news of his death. Hastings replied that the death had been unofficially reported in a letter received at the same time as a public despatch from Colonel Leslie, and in a moment of confusion he had supposed the death was mentioned in the despatch and so had not produced the letter. He then did so, giving an extract as follows: "I have had the misfortune to lose Captain James Crawford, who commanded the 4th Battalion of Sepoys, by a most violent fever which carried him off in less than two hours." The letter was dated 5th June: and we find an official despatch dated 15th June, from Leslie from "Meergawa"—of course Margawan or Margayan. It seems therefore quite clear that the Captain James Crawford of this tomb must be the unfortunate officer whose death Leslie reported. But for this absurd attack of Francis on Hastings, the letter would never have emerged from the obscurity of Hastings' waste paper basket into the glare of the proceedings of the Secret Select Committee; and the tomb would have remained a puzzle. Parturient montes."

Nothing else is definitely known of James Crawford. He appears to be the officer mentioned by Dodwell and Miles, who became an ensign in 1764 (at the age of 15), a lieutenant in 1765, was dismissed the service on 16th February and restored on 7th July 1767; and then Dodwell and Miles know no more of his fate. We find a Lieutenant James Crawford giving evidence in the trial of Sir R. Fletcher for mutiny in 1768; if this is the same, it would explain the dismissal, whilst the subsequent restoration was more or less universal (even Sir R. Fletcher was reinstated). But it is not certain, for there are two James Crawfords mentioned about this time, and distinguished as senior and junior. It is pretty clear however that this was the James Crawford who was appointed to command the 1st Battalion of the 4th Sepoys in 1768, and gave his name to them—Crawford ki paltan; in which case he was the senior of the two.]

OLD CIVIL CEMETERY.

594.—1799—(1) CHERRY, G. F. (2) CANWAY, Captain. (3) GRAHAM, R. (4) EVANS, R. Inscription:—This obelisk was erected in memory of George Frederick Cherry, Esq., Governor General's Agent, Captain Canway, Robert Graham, Esq., Richard Evans, Esq., who were murdered by Wazir Ali, 14th January 1799.

[Wazir Ali succeeded his reputed father Asaf-ud-daula as Nawab of Oudh in 1797. Doubts were however thrown on his legitimacy: though put on the throne by the intervention of the company, he nevertheless proved faithless: and Sir John Shore after personal inquiry deposed him, and placed Saadat Ali on the throne in his place (1798). Wazir Ali was conveyed to Benares and took up his residence in Madho Das' garden.

Mr. Cherry was A. G. G., and Mr. Davis, judge and magistrate at this time. Mr. Davis warned Mr. Cherry that Wazir Ali entertained sinister designs: Mr. Cherry refused to credit them, but the Calcutta authorities realizing the error of keeping him at Benares decided to remove him to Calcutta. This led to the climax for it upset all Wazir Ali's plans. On the 14th January, by his own desire, Wazir Ali paid a visit to Mr. Cherry. In the course of conversation Wazir Ali stabbed at Mr. Cherry and he was cut down by his followers whilst trying to escape. Mr. Evans, a young Private Secretary, was killed in a neighbouring field and Captain Canway was killed as he rode up to the house. Mr. Graham, a young civilian, was murdered by the party as they marched to attack Mr. Davis. This gentleman defended himself at the top of a narrow staircase leading to the roof with a hog spear till relieved by General Erskine and his troops. Wazir Ali managed to escape: a reward of Rs. 20,000 was put on his head; but he was ultimately surrendered to Colonel Collins by the Raja of Jaipur, with whom he had taken refuge. He was imprisoned in a bomb proof building in Fort William for several years and subsequently transferred to Vellore, where he died (1817.)

G. F. Cherry (1761-1799) entered the B. C. S. in 1778, was Lord Cornwallis' Persian Secretary and went with him to Madras, and on a mission to Seringapatam, when he painted Tippu Sultan's portrait, now at the India Office. Of his two brothers one was Member of Council, Bombay (J. H. Cherry died 1803) and the other in the Madras C. S. (Peter Cherry died 1833). Two sons, a grandson, and a great-grandson of J. H. Cherry were in the Madras services, Robert Graham was the eldest son of the 12th laird of Fintry and was born in 1776. The family is very ancient and of considerable note. It goes back legendarily to William Graham of Abercorn and Dalkeith circa 1120. The line is traced unbroken to Sir William Graham of Kincardine (1400). From him, by his first marriage, are descended the Dukes of Montrose: by his second marriage he is ancestor of the Grahams of Fintry and Knockdolian, and the Gracemes of Garrook. Graham of Claverhouse, Viscount Dundee, was a member of the Fintry family. Robert Graham's brother was that Colonel John Graham who gave his name to Grahamstown (S. Africa.) Another famous member of the family in the Garrook branch was Thomas Graham, the victor of Barrosa. This extremely ancient family has made its full share of history in its time. Captain E. S. Canway (so Dodwell and Miles) was appointed lieutenant in 1778 and captain in 1796.]

595.—1822—WILFORD, F., Lieutenant-Colonel. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Francis Wilford, Lieutenant-Colonel in the Engineer Service of the East India Company, aged 71 years, deceased on the 4th of September 1822. Encouraged by the liberality of the Government of British India, he fixed his residence at Benares in the year 1788; and whilst yet, in the vigour of his days, devoted his life to retirement and study, eminently qualified by previous education, extensive erudition, a true intellect and indefatigable zeal. He made himself master of the classical language and literature of the Hindus, and applied his knowledge to the eradication of the dark periods of antiquity, with a success that perpetuates his own reputation and the honour of the British name in the East. In the social relations of life, his merits were proportioned to his talents, and the abilities of the scholar were reflected by the virtues of the man.

[Colonel Wilford was an Oriental and Sanskrit scholar of considerable repute, a devoted supporter of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, and a voluminous contributor to the pages of the Asiatick Researches. Many of his dissertations on the chronology, history and antiquities of India show great learning, labour and ingenuity: but the extravagance of their conjectures at once makes the reader dubious of their real value. The very titles of these articles are almost enough to throw doubt on them; e.g. one finds essays "on Egypt and other countries adjacent to the Nile, from the ancient books of the Hindus;" "on Semiramis, the origin of Mecca, &c. from the Hindu Sacred Books;" "on the names of the Cabirian Deities and on some words used in the mysteries of Eleusis;" "on Mount Caucasus;" "on the sacred Isles of the West," &c., &c. It is not therefore surprising to come across the discovery, stated by Wilford himself in a later essay, that he had been imposed upon by his pandits, who with an oriental's characteristic desire to say that which would prove acceptable to the hearer, did not hesitate to forge the names of such places as "Egypt" or "Mount Meru" in old manuscripts, by substituting them for the names of other places, and in one case at least even went so far as to write themselves a whole book of several thousand lines to prove something Wilford wanted to prove. But in the wild conjectures of which Wilford was guilty he was by no means alone: and it is not perhaps surprising that in an age when the orator still quoted Virgil in the House of Commons or over the wine, classical scholars brought face to face with an ancient literature should allow their fancy to run riot in analogies and comparisons between what they knew and what they were striving to learn. Certainly Wilford, when he discovered how he had been cheated, published with the most complete candour a recantation of his former opinions; with the result that his later works (e.g. his essays on the Geography of India) are of great value.

He was well fitted for the direction of Jonathan Duncan's new Sanskrit College at Benares. The College had been opened in 1791: but things did not go well: disputes and abuses occurred: and Government appointed (1798) a committee consisting of Messrs. Cherry and Davis and Captain Wilford to inquire into these. It was in 1799 that Wilford reported and obtained the dismissal of the Pandit who had deceived him, Vidyanand by name, and a professor in the College. In 1800 Captain Wilford became Secretary to the Committee which took over the management of the College; and for some years he practically ruled the institution. It is not quite clear when he severed his connection with it. Of the man himself, all that is discoverable is that he was of Swiss extraction; but his name is remembered as that of a scholar. He joined the service in 1781, became lieutenant-colonel in 1814 and was subsequently invalided. Otherwise he appears to have no history. As was said of a greater philosopher, philosophers seldom have any history: "it is a compensation."]

His amiable character endeared him alike to the Hindu, the Musalman and the Christian inhabitants of this city.

[Mr. W. A. Brooke was at Benares for at least some 20 years. In 1813 he is found as President of the Sanskrit College Committee, an institution in which he took a very great deal of interest all through his residence at Benares. In 1824 he was visited by Bishop Heber who stayed with him in his house at Secrole on his journey through Upper India. The Bishop writes of him "Mr. Brooke has been 56 years in India, being the oldest of the Company's resident servants. He is a very fine healthy old man, his manners singularly courteous and benevolent." As he was born in 1752 and came out to India about 1768 (according to these dates) it is probable that he came out as a very junior writer.]

- 599.—1838—BROWN, C., Major-General. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Clements Brown, Companion of the Most Honourable Military Order of the Bath, Colonel in the regiment of Bengal Artillery, and Major-General on the staff of the army. A soldier from his youth, he delighted in his profession, and after an uninterrupted career of more than half a century of gallant and honourable service, and while still in the active and zealous discharge of his duties, departed this life 25th April 1838, aged 72 years.

[The name, according to Stubbs, is Clement Brown; but most authorities give it as "Clements", whilst the "Services B. A. List" have the variant "Clements Browne." This officer is one of the most famous of half-forgotten Anglo-Indian worthies. He came of an Irish family and arrived in Bengal as an infantry ensign in 1785, but was transferred to the artillery in 1789. He fought in the Mysore war of 1790-2, and at Bhitaura (1794), and in 1800 was selected as first commander of an experimental troop, which developed into the famous Bengal Horse Artillery. He fought with Baird in Egypt in 1802, and in some of Lake's later actions, in the pursuits of Holkar and Amir Khan, and also at Bhurtpore (1804). From 1810 to 1812, he was home on leave; in 1814 he became gun carriage agent, first at Allahabad and then at Fatehgarh. In 1824 he became Lieutenant-Colonel Commandant, and 1825 was present at the second and successful siege of Bhurtpore, in command of the B. H. A. In 1831 he succeeded to the command of the Regiment, became a Brigadier in 1833 and Major-General in 1837. He was given his C. B. in 1826. He was warm-hearted and impulsive, extremely liberal, subscribing for instance £100 for the raquet court in the artillery lines at Meerut—one of the gallantest members of one of the gallantest corps known to history.]

Missionary to India, July 17th, 1840. On the night of May 1st, 1850, her brief but luminous career on earth was suddenly terminated by a violent and instantaneous death occasioned by the explosion of a large magazine fleet at Rajghat."

[The explosion referred to occurred as follows: A fleet of 34 boats laden with gunpowder and military stores was moored near Rajghat. It consisted of 3,000 barrels of gunpowder and 6,000 shells besides other stores. The thatch covering of one of the boats was set on fire, and the gunpowder in two of the boats exploded: the rest of the fleet and some thirty other boats laden with merchandise were sunk by the shock. The houses of Messrs. Gordon, Tattle, Charles, Small and the Shahzada Mirza Muhammad Shujah, an ex-prince of Delhi, were destroyed and their inmates perished in the ruins. 818 persons are said to have been killed and 71 wounded. "Cat. H. Cart" is obviously a ludicrous sculptor's error for Cathcart.]

601.—1781—(1) STALKER, J., Lieutenant. (2) SCOTT, A., Lieutenant. (3) SYMES, J., Lieutenant. Inscription:—This monument to the memory of Lieutenants John Stalker, Archibald Scott, and Jeremiah Symes, who were massacred at Shivala on the 16th day of August 1781, though erected by the hand of friendship, shall offer no praise which themselves might blush to read, yet be it remembered that the determined courage they showed was not an act of desperation, but a part of their characters as British officers that they fell not wholly useless to their country's cause in the sentiments, awe and respect they impressed on their enemies, in the tears of regret and emulation they drew from their fellow-soldiers.

[Raja Chait Singh of Benares, a feudatory of the Government, was called on by Warren Hastings to pay a yearly subsidy of 5 lakhs. He did so for two years, after much delay and reluctance. Hastings then demanded 2,000 horse: though the demand was reduced to 1,000, none were sent. There was no doubt that he was also generally disaffected. Hastings, determined to punish him, went himself to Benares. On the 15th August, he sent the Raja a formal statement of the charges against him with a demand for a full and categorical reply. The reply was both unsatisfactory and offensively worded. Hastings then sent Mr. Markham, the Resident, to place him under arrest. This he did next day, and the Raja was made a prisoner in his own palace at Shivala Ghat with a sepoy guard of two companies under Lieutenant Stalker, Scott and Symes. The Raja's armed retainers then came over from Ramnagar on the other side of the river and set upon the guard, which by a fatal mistake, had taken no ammunition with them; the bodies of the Lieutenants were found lying close together and shockingly mangled. "These officers were the first victims to the fury of the tumultuous assembly," writes Warren Hastings: but not until they had by astonishing efforts of bravery, and undismayed amidst the imminent dangers which surrounded them, involved a much superior number of their enemies in their fate. I yield to my own feelings in bestowing this just but unavailable tribute to these unhappy gentlemen." Lieutenant Archibald Scott is probably the 4th son of John Scott of Maluny by his wife Susan, grand-daughter of the 2nd Marquis of Tweeddale. (Burke merely records him as "H. E. I. C. S., killed in action," without dates: but the general facts correspond). Two of his brothers died, and another also served in India. The Scotts of Maluny are of the same stock as the house of Buccleuch. Stalker joined the service in 1771, Scott in 1776 and Symes in 1778.]

OLD ARTILLERY LINES.

- 603.—1857—GUISE, H. J., Captain. Inscription:—To the beloved memory of my husband, Captain Henry John Guise, 2nd son of General Sir J. W. Guise, Baronet, of Gloucestershire, who fell when in command of the 13th Irregular Cavalry, and in the gallant discharge of his duty, by the hands of the mutineers, 4th June 1857.

[Benares was by its geographical position, its wealth, and the fact that it was a divisional capital, a most important post, and at the same time one peculiarly exposed to danger. The force consisted of a mere handful of British Artillerymen and three native regiments: the 37th Native Infantry, the 13th Irregular Cavalry and the Ludhiana Sikhs. Luckily F. Gubbins, the Judge, and Tucker, the Commissioner, were both strong men, especially Gubbins. Brigadier Ponsonby was of a somewhat vacillating nature however, and moreover not in good health. On the 30th June, Neill arrived with a detachment of his regiment. The next day the news of the Azamgarh mutiny arrived: and it was decided to disarm the troops. Neill persuaded Ponsonby to do it at once. The troop turned out, Olpherts with his guns and the Madras Fusiliers facing the 37th. The 37th were ordered to pile arms and had begun to obey when the advance of the British troops frightened them: they seized their muskets and fired a volley. Olpherts at once opened on them with grape. The Sikhs advancing to support the English, were startled by firing in their rear: one of the Irregulars had fired at an officer: and the Sikhs, some of whom were positively disloyal and the rest confused and fearful of treachery, attacked the artillery. Olpherts turned his guns on them. The Sikhs also broke and fled.

It has been held that this was a mismanaged affair; that the Sikhs were driven into rebellion with grape. That it was mismanaged is certain: but there is very good evidence that a proportion of the Sikhs (who were by no means all Sikhs) were disloyal. Accounts vary: but there seems a possibility that some of the Sikhs would at all events have stood firm, as they did at Mirzapur and Allahabad.

Captain Guise was killed by the 37th, Ensign Hayter by the Sikhs. Ensigns Chapman and Tweedie were also wounded. Captain Guise (1817-1857) was 2nd son of General Sir J. W. Guise, G. C. B., 3rd Baronet, Colonel of the 85th. He married Frederica, daughter of Sir W. Verner, Bart., M. P., and left two sons. Sir J. W. Guise distinguished himself in the French wars, in Egypt, and the Peninsula. The family is a very old one, dating back to Nicholas de Gyse, A. D. 1262, who married a relative of John de Burgh, son of Hubert, Earl of Kent.]

- QUEEN'S COLLEGE, BENARES.
- 614.—1811—DUNCAN, J. Inscription :—In memory of Jonathan Duncan who founded the Sanskrit College at Benares in 1791.

[This tablet, and the next, were set up in 1905 by order of the Lieutenant-Governor, Sir J. J. D. LaTouche, in memory of the founder of the Sanskrit College and the Architect of the Queen's College, its present home. They are placed in the south-east corridor on each side of the main door of the College. Though not actually epitaphs, they have been included, as Sir J. Strachey's tablet at Agra has been included, as the memorials, possibly the only memorials in the province, of two of its great men.]

Jonathan Duncan (1756—1811) son of Alexander Duncan, arrived in Calcutta in the E. I. C. Service in 1772. At the early age of 32 (in 1788) he became Resident and Superintendent at Benares, where his administration was marked by a vigorous suppression of administrative scandals and of infanticide. At the even more remarkable early age of 41 (1795) he became Governor of Bombay—a post he retained for so long a period as 26 years, till his death in 1811. He was at Bombay in the stirring times of Wellesley's rule: and the latter's despatches have frequent reference to the Honourable the Governor of Bombay. During the 2nd war against Tippu, the Maratha wars of Lake, Baird's expedition to the Red Sea, and the operations in Gujrat and Kathiawar, he played a not inconsiderable part, seconding Lord Wellesley's efforts in a way which the latter readily and frequently acknowledges.

He was a man of some literary ability. He contributed three papers to the "Asiatick Researches," all published in the 5th volume (1794). They were "Historical remarks on the coast of Malabar," "an account of two Fakcers," and "an account of the discovery of two urns in the vicinity of Benares." These urns were the subsequently celebrated urns of Sarnath, to which Cunningham refers in his Archaeological report. His interest in Sanskrit literature was shown in a practical way by his foundation of the Sanskrit College. In 1791 he urged Lord Cornwallis to set apart 20,000 sicca rupees from the revenue of the Benares zamindari "for the support of a Hindu College or academy, for the preservation and cultivation of the Sanskrit literature and religion of that nation, at this the centre of their faith and the common resort of their tribes." Lord Cornwallis sanctioned his proposal: and on the 26th October 1791 a number of "professors in the principal Hindu Sciences" met for the first time in a house hired for their reception. Such was the origin of the present Queen's College and more particularly of its Sanskrit department, whose pandits, as was said by Sir James LaTouche in 1904, "are household names among scholars in India and Europe." And if Jonathan Duncan had never played a part in making history his name would still have been famous wherever Orientalists are gathered together.]

615.—1853—KITTOE, M, Major. Inscription:—In memory of Major Markham Kittoe who designed and built this college at Benares 1848—1852.

Markham Kittoe was the son of R. Kittoe, R.N., born in 1808, and joined the service in 1825. In 1836 he met James Prinsep. He was then preparing his work "Illustrations of Indian Architecture." His antiquarian zeal and architectural knowledge commended him to Prinsep, who described him as an "invaluable antiquarian traveller." In 1837 Kittoe was removed from the army for bringing indiscreet charges of oppression against his commanding officer. Prinsep's influence secured him the post of Secretary of the Coal Committee which led to a long tour in Orissa, and articles in the Journal of the A. S. B. He was reinstated in the army in 1838, by order of the Court of Directors. In 1841 he went on leave to Europe, and on his return was given the charge of one of the divisions of the High Road from Calcutta to Bombay. It was not till 1846 that he had a chance of returning to archaeology when he travelled over Bihar and Shahabad "catering for James Prinsep." "He added much to archaeological knowledge but spent (or according to Cunningham, in view of photography, "wasted") much time in a collection of drawings of sculpture. These drawings are, or were, in the library of the East India Museum. He was then appointed by Mr. Thomason, "Archaeological Engineer" to Government. One of his duties was the preparation of a design for the Benares College. This work lasted the rest of his career, though he also undertook some extensive excavations at Sarnath. At the beginning of 1853 he went home to recoup, but he was so ill that "he went straight to his home and died."

The Journal of the A. S. B. for several years was full of his papers. There are no less than 27 such papers (Vols. VII, VIII, XVII, XVI, XVIII, XIX, XXI.) He was not a man of great knowledge "a self-educated man and no classic or Sanskrit scholar," as he said of himself: but he was an accurate draughtsman and an enthusiastic explorer. He provided the material for others' discoveries and notably for Prinsep's.

The Queen's College, which he built, is in a severe style of perpendicular Gothic consisting of a nave and transepts with a tall central tower; both nave and transepts are adorned with dark carved woodwork. This "Academe of the Indian Athens" reminds the spectator forcibly of Oxford and Cambridge Colleges and shows that Kittoe was no mean architect.]

- 617.—1843—POGSON, W. R., Lieutenant-Colonel. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Lieutenant-Colonel Wredenhall Roberts Pogson, of the XLVII Regiment, Native Infantry. Born on the 1st July 1787, and died at Benares on the 6th of August 1843, aged 56 years 11 months and 6 days. This monument is erected by the officers of the 47th and his friends and family as a token of respect to his memory.

[This is the tomb of Captain W. R. Pogson, author of the "History of the Bundelas." There can be no doubt of the identification; there is only one W. R. Pogson in Dodwell and Miles; he joined the service in 1803, became a captain in 1819 and a major in 1833, so that in 1828 (when the book was published) he was a captain; we find him transmitting several books for the acceptance of the Court of Directors in 1832; and he is described in the Services B. A. List as "a man of learning and author of some rather eccentric writings." Those who read his history will notice both the learning and the eccentricity. He was the son of B. Pogson, of Sutton; he fought at Bhurtpore and was mentioned in despatches. "He was buried by a roadside, according to a direction in his will," says the Services B. A. List. Tradition in Benares avers that he wished to be buried within sound of his bugles (the tomb is on the far side of the Native Infantry parade ground, and the N. I. lines.) It was doubtless unconscious irony which sent young buglers to learn their art (in 1904-5 at all events) in the grove in which his tomb stands, and prompted the bandmaster to choose that place as a fit spot for bugle practice generally.]

Take ye heed, watch and pray, for ye know not when the time is.

A. P. Currie arrived in India in 1826: he was at Haileybury from 1823 to 1825. He served in Burdwan, Gorakhpur, Benares, Hamirpur, Ghazipur, Etawah, Farrukhabad and Mirzapur. His wife was Jane Latham, daughter of G. Mainwaring, B.C.S.]

- 620.—1857—MOORE, W. R., B.C.S. Inscription:—This tablet is erected to the memory of William Richard Moore, of the Bengal Civil Service, Joint Magistrate and Deputy Collector of Mirzapur, whose mortal remains rest in the burial-ground of this station. He was the second son of Major J. A. Moore and Sophia Stewart, his wife, and was among the early victims of the fearful mutiny which desolated India in 1857, having been barbarously and treacherously murdered while in the energetic performance of his duty on the 4th July in that year. The remembrance of his high qualities as a public servant, of his excellence in all the relations of life, of his unsullied purity and honour as a man, and of his warm and unaffected piety as a Christian, furnishes to surviving relatives and friends consolation under a loss of which, alas! it also tells the greatness. He was born on the 28th October 1832, and died on the 4th July 1857, in the 25th year of his age.

He being made perfect in a short time, fulfilled a long time. Wisdom, chapter IV, verse 13.

[W. R. Moore was at Haileybury 1850-1 and arrived in India in 1852. The mutiny in Mirzapur was not of a very serious nature, and the authorities were able to make head against the rebels all through. It was at first garrisoned by half a Sikh corps, and when these were sent to Allahabad and replaced by the 47th Native Infantry, they too remained faithful, though suspected. On a false alarm the majority of the European residents fled to Chunar; but the only serious events were those connected with Bhadohi and the murder of Mr. Moore. Bhadohi belonged to the Raja of Benares, but the former Rajput owners had never been wholly uprooted, and now one of them, Udwant Singh, assumed his ancestral title and commenced to raise forces and plunder his weaker neighbours. He was, however, delivered up by his own Diwan to Lieutenant Palliser and his sowars, and hanged. They vowed vengeance on Moore, the Joint Magistrate and official Superintendent of the Raja's Domains, who they supposed was the chief cause of the execution. On the 4th July he made a raid from Gopiganj and arrested some prisoners whom he brought to an indigo factory at Pali. He was at once surrounded by Jhuria Singh and a large body of men and he and the two managers of the factory, E. S. Jones and C. M. Kemp, were murdered. Kemp was only 15 years old (vide nos. 759-60). His head was taken to the widow of Udwant Singh: she had offered Rs. 300 for it. The bodies were recovered by a party of the 64th Regiment. The rebels were attacked but the real murderers escaped.]

[Hugh Hope was fourth son of the ninth Baronet. He joined the service in 1803; one of his first posts was "second assistant to the export warehouse-keeper and deputy appraiser of piece goods at the Calcutta Customs," a title which shows how varied were the duties of our predecessors in the Civil Service. He was employed in Java, Patna, Jessore and Mirzapur, where he was "officiating import warehouse-keeper and naval store-keeper." The Hope's of Craighall are an old family of French extraction, dating back to John de Hope who came to Scotland in the train of Magdalene, Queen of James V. The first baronet was Sir Thomas Hope, an eminent lawyer, and Law Advocate (1626). Among other famous members of the family are Genl. Sir James Hope, G.C.B., who served in the French wars; Genl. Sir William Hope, K. C. B., who served in the Crimea; and Sir Theodore Hope, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., of the Bombay C. S. This very ancient family has possessed and still possesses no less than three Earldoms. It dates back to Sir William de Lindessi, of the 12th century. The 8th in succession, Sir David de Lindsay (Ambassador to England in 1849-51) first signed himself as Lord of Crawford : and his youngest son Sir William—one of Froissart's "Enfants de Lindsay"—was ancestor of the Earls of Lindsay. The 4th Lord of Crawford was made Earl of Crawford. The 2nd son of Lord Menmuir (a lord of session) who was 2nd son of the 9th Earl, became the 1st Lord Balcarres : and his son was made 1st Earl of Balcarres. 645.—1843—SALMON, W. B., Lieutenant-Colonel. Inscription:—To the memory of W. B. Salmon, Lieut.-Col., 58th Regiment, B. N. I., who departed this life on the 5th February 1843, aged 56 years, after a service of 39 years. This monument is erected by his brother officers as a tribute of their sincere esteem and respect.

[There is only one W. B. Salmon in Dodwell and Miles, so that it would seem that this must be William Broome Salmon, Sir J. B. Hearsey's brother-in-law. (Cf. nos. 551 and 850). Pearse says he died, a General, in England. This seems certainly an error, in so far as his rank was concerned, though this may of course be a cenotaph. All the facts given in the Services B. A. List about W. B. Salmon correspond with those given by Pearse, whilst the date of death is mentioned by the former. W. B. Salmon is stated to have been a captain in 1825, in command of the Resident's Bodyguard at Lucknow 1828—5, and even as going on leave to the hills in 1827—all facts mentioned of Hearsey's brother-in-law by Pearse; so there can be little doubt of the identification. He was the son of G. Salmon born in 1787 and joined the service in 1803.]

- 648.—1847—ROSE, H., B.C.S. Inscription :—To the memory of Hugh Rose, of Kilravock in Scotland, a Civil Servant of the H. E. I. Company, who died at this place on the 29th January 1847, and is here interred.

[Hugh Rose, eldest son of Hugh Rose, of Kilravock, to Nairn, according to Burke, "went to India where he became highly distinguished in the C. S. in Bengal." Prinsep gives his most important post as that of settlement officer at Cawnpore (1839-41) : and he was magistrate of Banda when he died. This Hugh was apparently the first of the family to go to India, but of his brothers three served in India, all during the mutiny and two were killed, one at Gwalior and one at Kaira in Bombay. Sir Hugh Rose, (Lord Strathnairn) was a kinsman. Two sisters also married Anglo-Indians. The family is ancient, dating back to the time of Alexander III ; and settled at Kilravock in the time of King John Balliol, since when the estate has descended unbroken to the present owner. The eldest son has apparently been a Hugh without any exception since the time of John Balliol. The Rose Innes family of Netherdale and the Roses of Holme Rose are junior branches of the same family.]

Also interred in the same tomb, Edward Budden Wollaston, son of the abovenamed, and Emma, his wife. Born June 22nd, 1850, died June 13th, 1851.

Them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him.

[Mr. Wollaston, previous to joining the L. M. S., was engaged in education at Agra where he published a "practical grammar of the Sanskrit language" and some other books. He joined the mission in 1804 and was ordained in November of the same year. He again gave his time to educational work, but in later years took to bazar preaching in which he greatly delighted.]

- 653.—1857—MOORE, W. - 654.—1858—(1) MALING, A. E. C. 1360—(2) MALING, C. S., Colonel. Inscription :—For ever with the Lord. I Thessalonians, Chapter IV, verse 7. Most sacred to the much loved memory of Colonel C. S. Maling, late Commandant of the 68th regiment, B. N. I., who departed this life at Mirzapur, March the 18th, 1860, in perfect faith in his redeemer. Most deeply deplored and lamented by his afflicted widow, family and friends, and sincerely regretted by his brother officers. "The name of the Lord is a strong tower, the righteous runneth into it and is safe." (Prov. Chapter 18, verse 10.) Also to the sweet memory of Anna Eliza Constance, the much loved infant child of the above and Eliza Caroline, his beloved wife, born in England 19th October 1856, and entered into Heaven 31st December 1858, aged 2 months and 12 days. He shall gather the lambs in his arms and carry them in his bosom. (Isaiah XL, verse 11th.) This sad monument is erected to the most fondly and most deeply-beloved memory of her beloved and very attached husband, by his bereaved and most deeply mourning widow, in the sure and certain hope of being most gloriously re-united to him in heaven for ever.

Not lost, but gone before.

[This was erected by Colonel Maling's second wife. His first died in 1844 of. no. 646. C. Simpson Maling, son of Captain C. Maling, 9th N. I., was born in India in 1808, and entered the service in 1823. He was captain in 1834, and commanded the Jodhpur legion 1839-41.]

- 656.—1862—FAIRLIE, E., B. C. S. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Edward Fairlie, Esq., Bengal Civil Service, the fifth son of James Fairlie, Esq., who died here on the 30th September 1862, in the 28th year of his age, much regretted by all who knew him.
- Fear not, for I have redeemed thee ; I have called thee by thy name ; thou art Mine.
- [The 5th son of James Fairlie of Holms, co. Ayr, he was at Haileybury 1854-6 and came to India 1857. Two of his brothers were also in the Indian Army. The family is descended from Robert de Ros, of Trarbet, who obtained the Fairlie lands from Robert Bruce, and changed his name. This branch is descended from a cadet of the family who lived circa 1641. The Fairlies are connected with the Muirs by marriage (cf. no. 545); whether it is this branch I am however uncertain. A. Jean Fairlie married a John Muir of Netherraith, and died in 1829, but I cannot identify the latter. At all events Fairlie appears in the names of a brother, son and grandson of Sir William Muir ; whilst Mungo, another "Muir" name is also common amongst the Fairlies : it was the name of a brother of the Jean mentioned and also of a brother of Edward Fairlie, amongst others. The probability is, therefore, that this Fairlie is a distant connection of the many Muirs in this province.]

- 657.—1862—HOGG, E. H., Mrs. Inscription :—To the memory of Elizabeth Helen, wife of Fergusson Floyer Hogg, who died at Mirzapur, 4th December 1862, aged 24 years.

Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.

[Cf. no. 653.]

- 658.—1862—HOGG, F. F., B.C.S. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Fergusson Floyer Hogg, Bengal Civil Service, who died at Chunar, 19th December, 1862, aged 35 years.

He rests in the Lord Jesus.

[F. F. Hogg, (1829-1862) was 3rd son of the Right Hon. Sir James Weir Hogg, P. C., Registrar of the Supreme Court of Calcutta, 1822—33, Director and Chairman of E. I. C. and practically (as M. P. for Honiton) their representative in Parliament, and one of the first members of the Indian Council in 1858. He refused the Governorship of Bombay in 1853. Amongst other well-known Anglo-Indian members of this family are C. S. Hogg, Administrator-General of Bengal (1824—1870), Sir S. S. Hogg, B.C.S., Commissioner of Police and Chairman of the municipality, Calcutta, who also served in the North-West Provinces and the Punjab (born 1833) ; Sir F. R. Hogg, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., I.C.S., D.G. of the Post Office in India (born 1836), all brothers of F. F. Hogg ; whilst a son of Sir F. R. Hogg is now in the Indian Postal Department.]

Sir J. W. Hogg's eldest son became the first Lord Magheramorne. The family is a Scotch one that emigrated to Ireland at the end of the 17th century. By intermarriage with the McGarel family (the name is now McGarel Hogg) they came into possession of Magheramorne, a place of considerable antiquity. The name means "the settlement of the Mornes," a famous ancient Irish tribe ; as early as 511 A. D. it is mentioned as the birthplace of St. Comgale. It is on the borders of Lough Lerne.

F. F. Hogg was educated at Haileybury and came to India in 1849. He was Joint Magistrate of Mirzapur when he died. He married in 1861 Elizabeth Helen, eldest daughter of the Hon. L. Parsons, 3rd son of the 2nd Earl of Rosse. (Cf. no. 657). (According to Burke the date of the birth of F. F. Hogg is 1829 : according to the inscription it would be 1827.)]

- 660.—1864—DEMINE, J. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of John Demine, Commander of the Ganges Company Flat Alpha, who died of cholera at Mirzapur, June 3rd, 1864, aged 32 years. "Verily, every man at his best state is altogether vanity."

- 662.—1783—HUMPHREYS, E., Major. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Major Edward Humphreys, who died 6th May 1783, aged 46 years. This monument is erected by Captain Patrick McDougal, November 1783.

[The Chunar fort was handed over to the British after the battle of Buxar in 1764. It was an advanced post on the British frontier, a cantonment for many years and then the residence of European invalids up to the 60's at least. This of course explains the numerous cemeteries found here. In 1824 Bishop Heber visited it and describes it as follows: There were "some very good European habitations and a tale Gothic Tower"—that of the Mission Church. The whole scene is entirely English... the Castle with its union flag is such as would be greatly admired but not at all out of place in any ancient English seaport. The congregation was more numerous than I have seen out of Calcutta: there were about 200 European invalids besides officers, civil and military, and their families. Some of the Europeans are very old: there is one (1824) who fought with Clive."

Edward Humphries (so Dodwell and Miles) joined the service in 1767, became captain in 1777 and major in 1781.]

664.—1791—MCDONALD, J., Ensign. Inscription:—"In memory of Ensign John McDonald, departed this life the 24th December 1791, aged 55 years."

[There are one or two very curious tombs at Chunar; of these this and no. 686 are the strangest. In this case, the officer was born in 1736 and was an ensign, presumably, about 1752—five years before Plassey: in the other we have an officer born about 1703 and presumably an ensign about 1720. Yet there was no Bengal Army at these dates. From a very early date the Calcutta factors were allowed to keep an ensign and thirty men as a guard of honour: and one can only suppose that these were survivals of those early days unless indeed they were Madras officers who found their way up to Chunar at a later date.]

[The name is spelt both Kundson and Knudson. Christian Kundson came into the service from H. M.'s 84th in 1764 as an ensign, becoming a lieutenant in

[There is no such name as "Reparry" in the lists. This is probably the tomb of Richard Parry. "Re" is doubtless a contraction of "Richard" probably misspelt. "Elliot Vayle" similarly should be Elliot Voyle, a distinguished officer, who saw much service and was invalided in 1816. He was a contemporary of R. Parry, who joined the service in 1782. Dodwell and Miles gives the date of death of R. Parry as 10th October 1794 at Chunar.]

It is an instance of the curious connection of extremely ancient British families with out-of-the-way places in India. The family dates back to Osborn the Wyddel (or Irishman) a Fitzgerald of the great sept of the Irish Geraldines, who came to Wales and obtained "by grant or marriage or both" large possessions in Merioneth, about 1293. The family then descends through a long series of Welsh chieftains from Cymric ap Osborn, Osborn's son, to Robert Wynne ap John, died 1589. His grandson (died 1658) was the first to droop the "ap". Apparently, R. O. Wynne was the only one that ever came to India.]

CANTONMENTS.

- 789.—1805—CORNWALLIS, C., Marquess. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Charles, Marquess Cornwallis, Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, General in His Majesty's Army, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief in India, &c., &c.

His first administration, commencing in September 1786, and terminating in October 1793, was not less distinguished by the successful operations of war, and by the forbearance and moderation with which he dictated the terms of peace, than by the just and liberal principles which marked his internal Government. He regulated the remuneration of the servants of the State on a scale calculated to ensure the purity of their conduct. He laid the foundation of a system of revenue which, while it limited and defined the claims of Government, was intended to confirm hereditary rights to the proprietors, and to give security to the cultivators of the soil. He framed a system of judicature which restrained within strict bounds the power of public functionaries, and extended to the population of India the effective protection of laws adapted to usages and promulgated in their own languages. Invited in December 1804 to resume the same important station, he did not hesitate, though in advanced age, to obey the call of his country. During the short term of his last administration he was occupied in forming a plan for the pacification of India which, having the sanction of his high authority, was carried into effect by his successor. He died near this spot, where his remains are deposited, on the 5th day of October 1805, in the 67th year of his age. This monument, erected by the British inhabitants of Calcutta, attests their sense of those virtues which will live in the remembrance of grateful millions long after it shall have mouldered in the dust.

[Charles, 1st Marquess and 2nd Earl Cornwallis, Viscount Browne (1738—1805) was son of the fifth Baron and 1st Earl Cornwallis, Chief Justice of Eyre south of Trent, and Constable of the Tower. He was educated at Eton and at the Military Academy of Turin. He entered the army and served at Minden, Labina, and other minor actions. In 1760 he was member for Eyre, but in 1762 succeeded to the Earldom. In 1768 he married Jemima, daughter of Colonel Jones of the Foot Guards. In 1776, he commanded a division in the American War of Independence though, politically, he had opposed the war and the actions that led to it. He won the battles of Rugeley Mills and Guildford, but was compelled to surrender at York Yown. In 1784 and 1785 he was twice offered and twice declined the Governor Generalship; but against his own desires accepted it in 1786. He reformed both the civil and military services. In 1790 he took command (as Commander-in-Chief) of the Army against Tipu, captured Bangalore (1791), defeated Tipu at Seringapatam and took Nandidrug, Savandrug and besieged Seringapatam in 1792, when Tipu submitted, and ceded territory and paid a large indemnity. For those services he was made a Marquess. He carried out the permanent settlement of Bengal in 1793 against the advice of Sir John Shore. He forbade trading by civil servants and restricted the practice of commission. He also defined a collector's powers, which are very much those of a modern collector as regards revenue, court of wards, khas (or Government) estates, partition and excise. He also reformed the judiciary and magistracy; all of these reforms are embodied in the Cornwallis Code. He reduced Pondicherry in 1793 and then returned home. On his return he was sent on a mission to Flanders in connection with the allied armies. In 1795 he became Master of the Ordnance and commander of the troops in Essex and Hertfordshire, then an important post. In 1797 he was selected to go out to India to settle certain grievances of the officers of the Bengal Army, but his services were required in Ireland as Viceroy and Commander-in-Chief, where he crushed the rebellion of 1798, defeated the French under General Humbert, and supported the Act of Union, but resigned in 1801, over the question of Catholic Emancipation. In 1802 he was sent to conclude the peace of Amiens. At the age of 67 he was sent out to India once more as Governor General with the avowed object of replacing Lord Wellesley's expansive policy by a more pacific regime. He at once prepared for a visit to the Upper Provinces, but his duties were now too severe a tax on his age and health and he died at Ghazipur.

Cornwallis's character has not always been fairly drawn. "The highest order of commonplace" is perhaps the unkindest form of the general verdict. But he was certainly nothing of the kind. In many points, especially in his transformation of the Company's servants from merchants and clerks to administrators, he was far ahead of his time. He was essentially a "safe" statesman, one on whom a ministry could rely. The purifier and reconstitutor of the civil administration of India, the founder of modern Indian law, the statesman who carried out the Union of Ireland, the diplomat who brought about the Peace of Amiens, has done a good deal to counterbalance the censure which rightly belongs to his reversal of Lord Wellesley's policy. He was not in the same flight as Dalhousie, Wellesley or Warren Hastings; but his place in the list of Governor Generals is high.

His life was one of uninterrupted devotion to duty. He fought in three continents and ruled in two. "Bonum virum facile crederes: magnum identem." And lastly, he died in harness; Finis vitæ ejus nobis luctuosus, amicis tristis, extraneis etiam ignotisque non sine cura fuit " was an apt Tacitean quotation that appeared in the Gazette of Calcutta at the time of his death.

The family of Cornwallis was of some importance in Ireland before it became famous in England. Thomas Cornwallis was Sheriff of London in 1779,

The first Baron Cornwallis was a loyal supporter of the two Charles' (baron 1661.) The fifth baron was Marquess Cornwallis' father. The family is now extinct in the male line. Cornwallis's son died in 1823. At his death the earldom passed to the Bishop of Lichfield and then to his son, and the title became extinct in 1852. On the distaff side however, descendants are to be found in the families of Lord Braybrooke (who is the great-great-grandson of the Governor General) and Earl St. Germans.

Cornwallis' monument is a domed quasi-Grecian building with a cenotaph by Flaxman. Heber has some hard things to say of it. He says it is an imitation of the Sybil's Temple, of large proportions, and solid masonry, raised on a lofty basement. But its pillars are of "the meanest Doric," "too slender for their height," and he notices various other architectural defects. But at his time and from his description it would appear to have been unfinished. There is a statue by Bacon in the Town Hall, and a full length portrait in the Council Chamber at the India Office. The statue does not appear to be a happy effort, as Cornwallis is in the garb of an ancient Roman, with two female figures of justice and truth, of no particular age or country, and a cornucopia pouring forth all sorts of Indian fruits and vegetables from niches and custard apples to Indian corn. There is a similar statue over one of the staircases at the India Office.]

Tyler, Esq., late B. C. S.”

[The action at Azamgarh on the 19th July is probably some severe street and house fighting carried out by Mr. Venables on the 18th, according to the Mutiny Narrative. E. F. Tyler retired in 1855 and died in 1880.]

- 795.—1857—POMEROY, R. H., B.C.S. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Robert Henry Pomeroy, B.C.S., Assistant Magistrate of Ghazipur, late scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge, only son of the late Hon'ble Henry Pomeroy. Born May 18th, 1832, died at Ghazipur, August 1st, 1857. The many fine gifts with which God had graciously endowed him, he early consecrated to the service of their Giver. Prompted by a stern sense of duty he voluntarily assumed office in the hour of the State's most imminent peril. In his short but toilsome term of service, his vital powers were exhausted, and he fell asleep in Jesus, leaving a noble example of Christian self-denial forcibly illustrating his own words “It is of more importance how I live, than how long I live.”

[As stated in the inscription, only son of the Hon'ble Henry Pomeroy, fifth son of the 4th Viscount Harborton. Sir George Pomeroy-Colley, killed in South Africa, was his first cousin.]

- 808.—1820—MONCKTON, P. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Philip Monckton, Judge and Magistrate of Gorakhpur, died on 6th January, A. D. 1820, aged 33 years. (B. O.)

[Philip Monckton (1787-1820) was 5th son of the Hon'ble Edward Monckton, who was 5th son of the 1st Viscount Galway. He arrived in India in 1803 and served in Aligarh, 24 Parganas, Jessore, Calcutta, Rangpur, Purnea, Rajshahi, Tirlhut, Shahabad, Mymensingh, and Gorakhpur. The first Lord Galway (1695-1751) was an M. P. and held a post in Ireland. This, and his creation as a peer of Ireland, presumably accounts for the title, for the family is a Yorkshire one, dating back to the 14th century. Sir Philip Monckton was a devoted adherent of the Stuarts and suffered at the hands of the Parliamentarians in consequence. His son Robert Monckton was an active promoter of the Revolution of 1688; another famous member of the family was Lieutenant-General R. Monckton, Wolfe's second-in-command at Quebec, and an uncle of Philip Monckton. A large number of the members of the family have served in India: a great grandson of Philip Monckton lives at Champaran at the present time. Philip Monckton married Henrietta, daughter of Michael Carter, and had 3 sons and 2 daughters of whom two served in India. He was uncle of Lieutenant J. R. Monckton, cf. No. 385.]

[Robert Mertins Bird, C.S., was an officer of considerable note in Gorakhpur, where he was Commissioner of Revenue in 1829. In 1832 he was made member of the new Board of Revenue, North-Western Provinces, and from 1833 to 1841 was in charge of the settlement of the Land Revenue of that Province, a work which "established his reputation for all time as a Revenue officer." He retired in 1842 and gave much time and attention to the C. M. S. His sister Miss Mary Bird was a celebrated missionary lady at Gorakhpur and in Calcutta. The tomb is that of his wife: his son (No. 821) and one of his daughters (No. 818) are also buried in this cemetery.]

- 811.—1827—CROMMELIN, C. B. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Charles Barker Crommelin, born 13th December 1790, died 27th February 1827.

He was a dutiful son, an affectionate husband and brother, a tender parent and a sincere friend; his conduct was marked by integrity, disinterestedness and liberality in all his transactions. He was the benefactor of the poor and the cheerful contributor to every charitable purpose during a residence of fourteen years at Gorakhpur, where his numerous acts of kindness and benevolence ensured to him, while living, the affection of his friends, and to his memory the regret of his survivors. (B. O.)

[There used also to be a replica of this inscriptoin at Lucknow, according to the B. O. I found a C. B. Crommelin mentioned (casually) as a civilian: but could not trace him in any list. In 1825 there was a C. C. M. Crommelin, a merchant, at Gorakhpur, who is probably a relative.]

- 813.—1832—CURRIE, S., Mrs. Inscription:—This table is inscribed in memory of Susannah, eldest daughter of J. P. Larkins, C. S., wife of Fred. Currie, Judge of Gorakhpur, born 10th November 1802, married 7th August 1820, who departed this life on the 14th January 1832. In sure faith in the atonement of Jesus and humble dependence for pardon and acceptance on His merits, resigned her spirit into the hands of God her father.

Them which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. (B. O.)

[This and tomb No. 818 are those of the 1st and 2nd wives of Sir Frederick Currie. Sir Frederick Currie (1799-1875) had a very distinguished career. Educated at Charterhouse and Haileybury, he reached India in 1820. In 1840 he became Judge of the Sadr Adalat of the North-Western Provinces and, in 1842, Foreign Secretary to the Government of India, in which capacity he attended Lord Hardinge throughout the 1st Sikh War and after Sohraon drew up, with Sir H. Lawrence, the treaty with the Sikhs. He became a Baronet in 1847 and succeeded Sir H. Lawrence as Resident at Lahore the next year, meantime officiating as Member of the Supreme Council. He resumed his seat as Member in 1849, retired in 1853, was made Director of the East Indian Company in 1854 and Chairman in 1857; Member of the Council of India from 1858: D. C. L. Oxford in 1866 and died in 1875.

The Currie family has sent many representatives to India. It is a branch of the old Scotch family of Currie, and can trace its records back to William Currie of Dunse in 1609. Through a succession of Williams and Marks the line passes to Mark Currie (1759) of Hayes in Middlesex, father of Sir Frederick, Edward and Alfred Peter, all H. E. I. C. S. (for A. P. Currie see No. 619). Sir Frederick married—1st in 1820, Susannah eldest daughter of John Pascal

Larkins, H. E. I. C. S. (whose tomb this is), and by her had four sons of whom one was in the C. S. (Charles Currie, died 1878, cf. No. 253). He married 2nd, Lucy Elizabeth, daughter of R. M. Bird, C. S. (in 1834 cf. No. 818) and by her had one son, Robert George (also C. S.). He married 3rd, Katharine Maria, daughter of George Powney Thomson, B. C. S.; by her he had three sons and four daughters, of whom the eldest was Major-General Fendal Currie, late a Commissioner in Oudh. Several of Sir Frederick's grandsons also were or are still in India in various services, whilst three of his granddaughters are also married to officers in India. Two of Frederick Currie's infant children are also buried in the Gorakhpur cemetery, according to the B. O.)

He died at Gorakhpur on the 10th December 1833 in the 21st year of his age.

[All available lists agree in stating the year of death as 1834, but they are probably all wrong, especially as the last two are doubtless based on the first. He was the son of Col. Armstrong (A. D. O. to the Duke of York) of Lisgoole Abbey, Enniskillen, and born at Clunish, co. Fermanagh in 1798. He was nominated by the Earl of Buckinghamshire at the instance of Lady Grantham, was educated at Haileybury and came to India in 1819. [Deputy Collector during the Mutiny. The Mutiny narrative only mentions him as burning a Muhammadan village (Mahua Dabar) whose inhabitants had murdered six officers, refugees from Fyzabad. He also rescued some other refugees. He was in fact the sole representative of Government, and had great difficulty in preserving his own life. His grant of land is in Basti district, round Birdpur. He was first manager and then owner of a large European estate there, which is still held by his successors, his sons Messrs. W. C. and G. T. Peppe and Mrs. Larpent, his daughter. [This officer was born at Sultanpur in 1836 (probably Sultanpur near Chunar). The tomb is near the 4th furlong of mile 65, Gorakhpur-Basti-Fyzabad road. Colonel Rowercroft was left in charge of Gorakhpur with 2 regiments of Gurkhas, the Behar Light Horse, and Captain Sotheby R. N., and his "Pearl" naval brigade. In March he started against a strong body of rebels, some 14,000 in number, who were encamped near Amorha, and defeated them on the 5th March and again on the 17th and 25th April, but they practically blockaded him at Amorha and he was compelled to retire.]

830.—1858—VENABLES, E. F. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Edward Fredrick Venables, Esq., of Deorighat, near Azamgarh, who though not in the service of Government, upheld its authority in this district during a time of trial and difficulty, with equal valour, ability and prudence, and after attaining the highest personal distinction, fell in the gallant discharge of his duty, leaving a name dear both to his own countrymen and to the loyal portion of the native community, by whose joint subscriptions this monument is erected.

[The Mutiny at Azamgarh began on the 3rd June 1857, and most of the Europeans fled to Ghazipur. On the 18th June, however, Mr. Venables, an indigo planter of Ghazipur, marched into Azamgarh with a few sowars and three non-official Europeans. He was given full magisterial powers. He attacked the Palwars at Koelsa without success. On the 18th July he was reinforced and attacked the Palwars again: and though he was driven back, the enemy suffered severely and disappeared. On the 28th July Azamgarh was once more evacuated: but Mr. Venables joined the approaching Gurkha force, and the enemy, compelled to retreat, were defeated at Mandoni by Captain Boileau and Mr. Venables on the 20th September. Mr. Venables went on to Lucknow with General Franks, but returned to Azamgarh when it was threatened by Kunwar Singh and in the pursuit of that chief by Sir E. Lugard received the wound of which he died. Mr. E. F. Venables was born in 1815 and was the son of Lazarus Venables, Barrister-at-law. The family originally belonged to Bolington, co. Chester, and then to Woodhill, co. Salop. Mr. Venables married Eliza Power, daughter of R. H. Kinchant of Oswestry, but had no children. The family is now extinct in the male line: its present representative is Mrs. Dillwyn-Venables-Llewelyn of Llysdyrnau Hall, co. Brecon.]

And scarce eleven months a wife;
Four days and nights in labour laid,

[This and the next three tombs stand in an enclosure at the south-east corner of the Public Gardens. Edmund (not Edward) Bury, son of J. Bury, stockbroker, of Nazing, was born in 1797. He arrived in India in 1817, served as Assistant Registrar of the Sadar Diwani Adalat, and Assistant Superintendent of Stamps, and then at Rajshahi and Tirhut. He died at Nattore on the 15th November 1824 according to all authorities save Burke who puts the death in 1821. There can be no doubt of the identification: apart from the fact that there is no other Bury in the lists, the occurrence of Nazing in the birth certificate proves it.]

[The great landslip of 1880 was due to an unprecedented fall of rain. It rained without cessation from the 16th to the 19th September and about 25 inches fell in the last 40 hours. The soil was saturated wherever the loose debris of shale allowed the water to penetrate. The first slip occurred about 10 a.m., on the 18th, carrying away part of the outhouses and the western wing of the Victoria Hotel and burying in the ruins an English child and its nurse and some native servants. Mr. L. Taylor, Mr. Morgan and some officers and soldiers from the depot were soon at work digging out the victims. Meantime the hotel residents removed to safer quarters, except Col. Taylor, R.E., who retired to a small room below the hotel. About half past one the second slip took place. The whole hill side was a semi-fluid mass and a shock of earthquake set it in motion. A large part of the hill disunited, completely buried the hotel and dashed the orderly room, a shop (Mr. Bell's) and the Assembly Rooms into an unrecognizable heap, part of the last being hurled into the lake. The whole catastrophe only lasted a few seconds and escape was impossible. The dead and missing numbered 151, including 43 Europeans and Eurasians. Of the names here given Mr. Noad was assistant to the Inspector-General of Police; the Revd. A. Robinson (M.A., Trinity College, Dublin) was Chaplain at Bareilly, and at Naini Tal on leave; Col. F. S. Taylor was Consulting Engineer for Railways to the Government of India and Mr. L. Taylor was a young assistant commissioner of five years' service.

Lieutenant James Barre Hood Carmichael (1860-1880) was son of Col. J. D. Carmichael, C.B., of the family of Carmichael of Balmedie. Many of the members of this family have served in India. Mr. Carmichael's grandfather (D. S. Carmichael) was Judge of the Calcutta Supreme Court early in the century: his uncle, C. P. Carmichael, C.S.I., was Commissioner of Benares; another uncle, D. F. Carmichael, was a member of the Madras Council, whilst there have also been representatives in the North-Western Provinces Police and the Indian Army. Mr. J. B. H. Carmichael's brother, the present head of the family, is in Madras (C. D. J. Carmichael). The family is a very old one; in 1886 an ancestor held the barony of Carmichael from the Earl of Douglas and Mar. His descendant William was created Baron Carmichael in 1647; and the latter's grandson, John, was made Earl of Hyndford in 1701. These titles became dormant in 1817, but are claimed by the present head of the family. John Ernest Holt Sullivan, born 1856 was the 3rd son of J. J. Sullivan, J. P., of Curramore, Co., Limerick. He is descended through his grandmother (also a Sullivan) from Oliol Ollum, King of Munster, A. D. 125, and legendarily from Heber Fionn, son of Milesius. Historically, the family goes back to Daniel O'Sullivan, died 1682.]

The regiments represented are now:—

25th, 1st Battalion, the King's Own Scottish Borderers.

92nd, 2nd Battalion, the Gordon Highlanders.

88th, 1st Battalion, the Connaught Rangers.

40th, 1st Battalion, the Prince of Wales's Volunteers (S. Lancashire Regiment).

[The wife of Mr. G. T. Lushington, vide No. 843.]

- 846.—1840—RAMSAY, A., Lieutenant. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Lieutenant Andrew Ramsay, fourth son of Major-General the Hon'ble Ramsay, who departed this life at Almora on the 1st July 1840, aged 30 years and 9 months.

[The district authorities conjecture that Andrew Ramsay was a brother of Sir Henry Ramsay, and are doubtless correct. Andrew Ramsay's "Services" in the Services B. A. List show him to be the son of the Hon'ble Colonel Ramsay H. M.'s Service, born in 1809. Sir Henry's father was Lieutenant-General the Hon'ble John Ramsay; Burke does not mention Andrew Ramsay above his sons, but he occasionally has omissions: and there is nothing against fitting Andrew Ramsay into the pedigree, for John Ramsay's other sons were born in 1804, 1806, 1808, 1811 and 1816; so that Andrew Ramsay (born in 1809) would be the 4th son. Further we find him in 1834 A. D. C. to Major-General the Hon'ble J. Ramsay, Commanding at Meerut; and in 1837 Assistant Commissioner in Kumaun—an appointment objected to by the Court of Directors on the ground of his lack of experience. In 1839-40 John Ramsay was still a Major-General; he died in 1842, a Lieutenant-General. In short, all facts point to the correctness of the view of the district authorities; there can be no doubt that Andrew Ramsay belonged to the same family, at all events, as Sir Henry, for there is no other family of Ramsays who are entitled to the prefix of Honourable. John Ramsay was 4th son of the 8th Earl of Dalhousie, and Sir Henry himself was "raised to the rank of an Earl's son" (i.e. obtained the prefix of Honourable) in 1874, when his brother succeeded to the title.

848.—1848—LUSHINGTON, G. T., B.C.S. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of George Thomas Lushington, C.S., Commissioner of Kumaun, born May 29th, 1806, died at Naini Tal October 25th, 1849.

[Mr. G. T. Lushington was educated at Haileybury and came to India in 1825. In 1826 he was Assistant Persian Secretary to the Governor General, and served in various secretariat posts till 1830. He then was in the political branch at Delhi and Bhurtupore (Agent 1832) and went on medical leave 1835-7. On his return he served as Collector of Bareilly and Etawah and then as Commissioner of Kumaun from 1839 to his death. He was one of the first founders of Naini Tal, which was discovered in 1839 by Mr. J. H. Batten and his brother-in-law, Mr. P. Barron. In 1842 the latter began to build, and Mr. Lushington also built a house; and also allotted sites for a bazar and public buildings, mostly at Talli Tal. Mr. Lushington was 3rd son of the Right Honourable S. R. Lushington, P. C., Governor of Madras (1827-35), and an M. P. Many of his relatives have served in India, mostly in Madras: i.e., Sir. J. L. Lushington, G.C.B., his uncle (Director of the E. I. C.); O. M. Lushington, another uncle, a Circuit Judge in Madras, two of whose sons became Accountants General (Madras and Bombay); and a nephew, T. D. Lushington, also Madras C. S. 849.—1815—(1) KIRK, Lieutenant. (2) TAPLEY, Lieutenant. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Lieutenants Kirk and Tapley, both of the 2nd Bn., 27th Regt. N. I. This cenotaph is erected by their brother officers as a testimony of their regret and esteem. The latter was killed on the evening of the 26th April 1815 on duty at an advanced post in the town of Almora. The former died on the 16th of May following, a victim to zealous and continued exertion in the final operations of the campaign.

[Even in 1814 Lord Hastings had determined on annexing Kumaun. The Hon'ble E. Gardner was sent to try negotiations with Ram Sah, supposed to be disaffected to the Gurkha Government. Negotiations however failed, and it was decided to use force. Colonel W. L. Gardner and Captain H. T. Hearsey (of. nos. 395 and 551) were employed to raise Rohilla levies; and in February 1815 Colonel Gardner entered the hills by the valley of the Kosi, whilst Captain Hearsey entered them from Pilibhit up the Kali by the Timla pass. All went well with the first force which by mixed fighting and manoeuvring, drove the Gurkhas back on Almora and reached Katarnal, seven miles thence.

Meantime Captain Hearsey, at first successful, was defeated at Khilpati and taken prisoner. On the 6th April Lieutenant-Colonel Gardner was reinforced by a force of 2,025 regulars under Colonel (afterwards Sir Jasper) Nicolls, who superseded him. On the 23rd April the Gurkhas were attacked and defeated at Gananath; and on the 25th the heights of Sitoli were taken, two miles west of Almora. A counter-attack was delivered the same night; the sortie from Almora on the advanced post was very determined, and it was during this attack that Lieutenant Tapley was killed. On the 26th the fort of Almora was bombarded, and the Gurkhas surrendered. Kumaun was delivered up to the British the next day by a convention.

David Kirk was appointed cadet in 1804 and lieutenant in 1805: he was the son of J. Kirk, merchant, born at Perth in 1785. Richard Tapley, son of R. Tapley of Great Torrington, Devon, was born in 1791, joined the service in 1807 and became a lieutenant in 1814.]

The monument is erected as the last tribute of their affection by her afflicted and disconsolate parents.

[This tomb, in spite of the partially defaced inscription can be identified as that of Miss Salmon, daughter of General W. B. and Mrs. Salmon, who was killed in the following circumstances. She, her parents and her uncle, Sir J. B. Hearsey (as he became later—cf. No. 551) were on a tour in the Garhwal hills. On their return in crossing the Nundakwe river the log bridge broke in two. The girl and her uncle were dashed into a boiling snow torrent from a considerable height. Captain Hearsey did his best to save her, but was nearly drowned himself. The body was found 14 miles lower down the stream caught in the fork of a tree. It was taken to Hawalbagh, five days' journey away, and buried in Mrs. Traill's garden.]

LUCKNOW DIVISION.

Lucknow District.

Note.—Almost all the Lucknow tombs belong to the Mutiny period. The operations in and around Lucknow are necessarily complicated. Fighting went on almost without cessation from June 1857 to the end of March 1858, and during that time six scenes of the great drama were played out all on the same stage, viz. (1) Lawrence's and Inglis's defence of the Residency, (2) Havelock and Outram's so-called relief (really no more than a reinforcement), (3) Havelock and Outram's second defence of an extended position, (4) Sir Colin Campbell's second relief, (5) Outram's operations at the Alambagh, (6) Sir Colin Campbell's capture of Lucknow. If the tombs are to be presented in some intelligible form and not as a mere jumble, passing from one to another of these scenes in the most confusing way, it is necessary that a sort of key, in the shape of a chronological skeleton of the operations should be given. This seems to be the easiest method of attaining lucidity without sacrificing the ordinary arrangements of the tombs by localities.

26th May 1857.—The English residents were housed in the Residency.

30th May—Mutiny of the 13th and 71st N. I. and destruction of the cantonments by fire.

31st May—Mutiny of the rest of the troops (48th N. I., Oudh force and cavalry); pursuit by British troops and faithful native troops.

1st June—Sir Henry Lawrence took up his quarters in the Residency.

30th June—Battle of Chinhat, and commencement of the siege of the Residency.

1st July—Destruction of the Machi Bhawan by its garrison.

2nd „ —Sir Henry Lawrence mortally wounded.

4th „ —Death of Sir Henry Lawrence. Succeeded by Brigadier Inglis in military command, and Major Banks as Chief Commissioner.

7th July—Sortie against Johannes' House.

20th „ —First assault. Mining operations commenced and went on regularly to the end of the defence. (There were 37 mines, of which only one was successful, between this date and the 25th September).

10th August—Second assault.

12th „ —A vigorous cannonade rendered the Cawnpore Battery untenable. Two sorties under General Inglis and Lieutenant Hutchin-son.

17th August—Destruction of Johannes' House.

18th „ —Successful mine, and 3rd assault on Sikh Square.

5th September—Fourth assault.

6th „ —Fulton's sortie.

23rd „ —Havelock and Outram's battle of the Alambagh.

25th September—First Relief.—A running fight began at the Alambagh, which ended at the seizure of the Char Bridge, which was held by the 78th Highlanders. The route was then along the canal as 17th March—Explosion at the Jama Masjid.

19th „ —Capture of Musa Bagh and route of enemy.

THE RESIDENCY.

852—1857—DEFENDERS OF THE RESIDENCY. Inscription.—In memory of Major-General Sir Henry Lawrence, K.C.B., and the brave men who fell in the defence of the Residency, A.D. 1857.

[This memorial cross stands on a high mound between the Residency and Banqueting Hall.]

The troops at Lucknow consisted of the 13th, 48th and 71st Native Infantry, the 4th and 7th Oudh Irregulars, the 6rd Native Police, the 7th Light Cavalry, the 2nd Oudh Irregular Cavalry, 1½ regiment of mounted police and 2 batteries of artillery. Of English troops there were only the 82nd and one weak company of artillery. As early as the 4th May the 7th Oudh Irregulars showed signs of disaffection. The position was also very unfavourable: the native troops were scattered about in the city and as far out as Mariam and Mudkipur on the far side of the river: the English troops were a mile to the east of the Residency. Sir H. Lawrence proceeded to fortify the Machi Bhawan and the Residency. On the 30th May the outbreak of the sepoys occurred. About 200 men of the 13th and a few of the 71st stood firm. The rest mutinied. Sir H. Lawrence then moved to the Residency. The rising had been quelled and the mutineers driven off with grape and some faithful cavalry. Lucknow was quiet for a time; and the defences were pressed on.

On the 29th of June a large body of mutineers, encouraged by the fall of Cawnpore, marched on Lucknow. On the 30th was fought the disastrous action of Chinhat: and the siege commenced. The Machi Bhawan was blown up, and all the defenders collected in the Residency.

It is extremely difficult to understand the Residency entrenchments from what remains of them at the present day. Many buildings have been swept away, and without a plan or model the task is nearly impossible. The present account is taken from Macleod Innes's "Lucknow and Oudh in the Mutiny" which contains a series of excellent plates.

The entrenchments were in shape nearly a square with sides about 440 yards long, and enclosing an area of between 32 and 36 acres. There were four fronts, which may be called the river (North) Front, the Baily Guard (East) Front, the Cawnpore (South) Front, and City (West) Front. It was on the edge of a bank, sloping down to the river. On the North Front was the only clear space the enemy had for attack; on the other three intervening buildings prevented the lower defences from being reached by artillery fire.

Along the Northern Front the posts were Innes' (north-west corner), the Redan and the Hospital, with the Baily Guard and Aitken's post in advance, at the north-east corner. The line of defence along this edge had been scarped down, and on the line itself, along the crest of the high bank, was a stout seven foot parapet, "revetted with gabions and fascines, topped with sandbags, and finished with a banquette for musketry."

Along the Eastern Front, which was in two tiers, the posts were, on the higher tier, the Hospital (north-east corner), Fayer's, the Post Office, Gernon's, and Anderson's (south-east corner); on the lower tier, the Baily Guard, Saunders' and Sago's. The line of defence was the boundary wall of the Residency and other buildings, which in its northern half was lined and strengthened inside with a musketry parapet but merely loopholed elsewhere: beyond were the verandahs, with archways bricked up and loopholed; and further back still the supporting posts, parapeted and loopholed. At the south-east corner it was specially strengthened.

The South Front had at the south-east corner Anderson's, at the south-west corner Gubbins' posts: with the Cawnpore Battery, Deprat's, the Martiniere, the Brigade Mess and the Sikh Squares. This was the most dangerous front, with the Cawnpore Battery commanded by Johannes' House, and no protection from distant artillery fire. The defences were the buildings themselves, which were loopholed.

The West Front lay between Gubbins' and Innes' Posts, and consisted of three ranges of outhouses, with the Church and Cemetery and Evans' Battery on high ground behind it. These outhouses were loopholed and parapeted.

The Redan, Cawnpore Battery and Slaughter-house Posts were held by English soldiers only: the Hospital, Baily Guard, Germon's and the Sikh Square by sepoy: and all other posts by a mixture of English soldiers, sepoy and volunteers.

There were also inner buildings—the Residency, Ommaney's House, the Begam Kothi—and in these and the lower storeys of Fayrer's, the Post Office, the Martiniere, the Brigade Mess and Gubbins' were housed the English families.

The Commandants were Lieutenant Loughnan at Innes' Post, Colonel Palmer, (North Curtain), Captain Lawrence (Redan), Lieutenant Langmore (Hospital), Lieutenant Aitken (Baily Guard), Captain Weston (Fayrer's), Captain Saunders (Saunders'), Lieutenant Clery (Sago's), Captain Germon (Germon's), Captain McCabe (Post Office), Lieutenant Anderson (Anderson's), Mr. Schilling (Martiniere), Colonel Masters (Brigade Mess), Lieutenant Hardinge (Sikh Square), Captain Forbes (Gubbin's), Captain Boileau (outhouses), Captain Evans (Evan's Battery), with a relief of Captains at the Cawnpore Battery and Deprat's. Of the siege nothing need be said. The sufferings of the garrison are so well known as to need no fresh description. They are written in the pages of Rees and Polehampton, Fulton, and of Lady Inglis and Mrs. Harris. From every point of view they are described—that of the British grumbler who grumbled as he fought and slew, in Rees; that of the jovial English officer who saw the humour of any situation, however dangerous, in Fulton; that of the brave and gentle Mrs. Harris, a Sister of Mercy in every sense but the professional one. The post that Sir H. Lawrence thought could be held for a fortnight, was held for 87 days. "There does not stand recorded in the annals of war an achievement more truly heroic than the defence of the Residency at Lucknow."]

- 854.—1857.—Inscription:—The Right Hon'ble the Earl of Caning, G.C.B., G.C.S.I., Viceroy and Governor-General of India, expressed his admiration of the defence of the Residency of Lucknow in the following words:—"There does not stand recorded in the annals of war an achievement more truly heroic than the defence of the Residency at Lucknow." On 30th June 1857 A.D., the day after the battle of Chinhut, the siege began. On the 2nd July, Sir Henry Lawrence was mortally wounded by a shell which burst within the Residency building. The command then devolved on Brigadier J. E. W. Inglis, Her Majesty's 32nd Regiment. The force within the defences then consisted of 130 officers, British and native, 740 British and 700 native troops, and 150 civilian volunteers. There were 237 women, 260 children, 50 boys of La Martiniere College, 27 non-combatant Europeans and 700 non-combatant natives, being a total of 2,994 souls.

[This tablet is on the south wall of the Women's Quarters.—Vide no. 852.]

- 855.—1857.—HER MAJESTY'S 32ND FOOT. Inscription:—To commemorate the gallant part taken by Her Majesty's 32nd Foot in the heroic defence of this Residency during the Indian Mutiny, 1857. Also to the memory of the officers, non-commissioned officers, men, women and children of the Regiment who perished during the Mutiny here and at Cawnpore. This monument of granite from the Bosahan quarry, Cornwall, was erected by the officers, warrant officers, non-commissioned officers and men past and present of the 32nd Light Infantry, now the 1st Battalion Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, while the battalion was quartered at Lucknow.

[Of. no. 440. It is unnecessary to add to what has already been said. The very names of the officers afford sufficient proof of what the regiment did. The 32nd is perhaps the regiment par excellence of the Mutiny.]

856.—1857.—NATIVE OFFICERS AND SEPOYS, 13TH BENGAL NATIVE INFANTRY. Inscription:—Erected in memory of the devoted gallantry and fidelity of the Native Officers and Sepoys of the Hon'ble Company's 13th Bengal Native Infantry (Garud-kaputtan), who fell during the defence of Lucknow. This monument is erected by the surviving European officers of the Regiment in the Baillie Guard Post, which was held by the regiment throughout the defence. Subadar Doondyal Pandey, Subadar Ram Pershad and Subadar Sheo Charan Singh, Jamadar Bhawani Bux Chowbe, Kalka Tewari, 9 Havildars, 8 Naiks, 5 Drummers, 24 Sepoys.

[This tablet is inside the Baily Guard. The 13th Native Infantry, about 300 men, stood firm. They did excellent service at the Baily Guard all through the siege. On the 1st July 1857 there were 12 native officers, 28 non-commissioned officers, 13 drummers and 186 rank and file. At Chinhat some of the sepoy were seen saving wounded European soldiers and abandoning their own wounded; whilst in the battle itself they behaved most bravely. They helped willingly with the spade as well as the rifle. They made a battery for an 18 pounder and worked it themselves. When Havelock's force entered the Baily Guard, three of the sepoy were bayoneted by mistake. "Never mind," said one of them, "it was fated: "victory to the Baily Guard" ("Kuchh parwa nahin, kismet hai—Baily Guard ki jai.") They did splendid work also all through the second siege. They were so close to the enemy that conversation was possible: but threats and promises were alike of no avail to seduce them from their allegiance. "Their courageous constancy under the severest trials is worthy of all honour," wrote Lord Canning. As a reward every member of the three faithful regiments (13th, 48th and 71st) were formed into a new regiment—the present 16th Rajputs (the Lucknow Regiment). In the end 1 Subadar Major received the 1st class, 11 Subadars the 2nd class of the Order of Merit: 16 Havildars were promoted to Jamadars of whom 2 also got the 2nd Class of the Order: 23 Naiks were promoted to Havildars, and 55 sepoy to Naiks; drummers and other followers received three months' pay. One Naik was promoted to Subadar with the 2nd Class of the Order, and 3 Naiks and 3 Sepoys to Jamadars in the Cawnpore Levy.]

858.—1857-58—OFFICERS AND MEN, 78th HIGHLANDERS.

Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of the officers, non-commissioned officers and private soldiers of the 78th Highland Regiment, who fell in the suppression of the Mutiny of the Native Army in India in the years 1857 and 1858. This monument is erected as a tribute of respect by their surviving brother officers and comrades, and by many officers who formerly belonged to the regiment, A.D. 1883.

(This memorial stands in the Residency enclosure south of the cemetery.—

The 78th Highland Regiment, now the 2nd Battalion Seaforth Highlanders (Ross-shire Buffs, the Duke of Albany's) were Havelock's famous Highlanders. They were with him in his advance and in all the subsequent Lucknow operations up to the final reduction by Sir Colin Campbell. This battalion was raised in 1798. The 1st Battalion was raised in 1778, and was also numbered 78th up to 1786, when the number was changed to 72nd. The two battalions between them have a long Indian honour roll. The 1st Battalion were in India from 1781-1798, and 1857-1865 and 1871-1882; the 2nd from 1797-1811; 1842-59; 1880-1897. The honours won in India are "Carnatic" and "Mysore," "Hindustan," "Assaye," "Lucknow," "Central India," "Pe war Kotah," "Charasiah," "Kahul 1879," "Kandahar 1880," "Afghanistan 1878-80," "Chitral." Carnatic, Mysore, Central India and all the Afghan honours belong to the 72nd and the rest to the 78th.

859.—1862—INGLIS, J. E. W., Major-General, Sir. Inscription :—

Sacred to the memory of Major-General Sir John Inglis, K.C.B., Colonel, Her Majesty's 32nd Regiment, who with a handful of devoted men defended the Residency of Lucknow for 87 days, from 3rd July 1857 to 27th September 1857, against an overwhelming force of the enemy. Born November 15th, 1814, died at Homberg, Germany, September 27th, 1862, from illness contracted during the siege. This memorial is erected by his surviving comrades and friends, A. D. 1894.

(This memorial stands to the south-east of the residency building.)

[Sir John Eardly Wilmot Inglis (1814-1862), son of the very Reverend John Inglis, D.D., Bishop of Nova Scotia, joined the 32nd Regiment in 1833. In 1837 he was in Canada, and present at the actions of St. Denis and St. Eustace. He was at both sieges of Multan and commanded the 32nd at Surajkund; he was also present at Cheniole and Gujrat (1846-49.) He succeeded to the command of the garrison on Sir H. Lawrence's death until the relief by Havelock; and as the general order said, the British Government owed him a heavy debt of gratitude. After the final relief of Lucknow he fought against Tantia Topi in December 1857; commanded the troops in the Ionian Islands in 1860, and died at Homberg in 1862. He was made Major-General and K.C.B. "for his enduring fortitude and persevering gallantry in the defence of the Residency of Lucknow for 87 days against an overwhelming force of the enemy." "An honourable Christian gentleman,.....a staunch friend, a lover of all that was high and noble, a soldier of unsurpassable gallantry."]

860.—1887—AITKEN, R. H. M., Colonel. Inscription :—This monument is erected to the memory of Colonel Robert Hope Moncrieff Aitken, V.C., Bengal Staff Corps, and formerly of the 13th Regiment, Bengal Infantry, by some of his surviving comrades and other friends in token of their appreciation of his sterling worth as a man, and of the splendid gallantry and chivalrous devotion which he displayed as a soldier in command of this post, which he held with the faithful and loyal remnant of the regiment to which he belonged throughout the defence of the Residency of Lucknow. Born 8th February 1828, died 18th September 1887.

[This memorial stands close to the Baily Guard Gate. Robert Hope Moncrieff Aitken (1828-1897) belonged to the 18th Native Infantry and had served in the Punjab campaign of 1848-49. In the defence of the Residency he was in command of the Baily Guard though another post, the Treasury Post close by the Baily Guard, was also called by his name. He and his faithful sepoy did excellent service on the 20th July in the assault of that date. He commanded them "with signal courage and success." He and his men also constructed a battery for an 18-pounder and worked it themselves. After the first relief he did good work in the capture of the Ruri Kothi, and at a sortie on the 29th September. He also fought in the operations before Cawnpore and in the Oudh Campaign of 1858, and gained the V.C. for various acts of gallantry at Lucknow. He became Inspector-General of Police in Oudh, and Colonel in 1876. Lord Roberts, on seeing the Baily Guard, marvelled that it could have been held for five months, as it was, by Aitken and Loughnan.]

- 861.—1904.—INGLIS, J., Lady. Inscription:—This tablet is erected as a memorial of the heroic and self sacrificing devotion to duty displayed by Julia, wife of Major-General Sir John Inglis, K C B., during the defence of the Residency, June to November 1857.

[This tablet is on the top of the steps leading down to the Residency tyekhana. The Hon'ble Julia Selina, Lady Inglis (1838-1904), was fourth daughter of the first Lord Chelmsford (Sir Frederic Thesiger, Lord High Chancellor 1858-59 and 1866-68). She published "The Siege of Lucknow, a diary" in 1893. She was shipwrecked on her way home and died in 1904.

Of her self-devotion one instance will suffice. Rees relates that the ladies from the Residency after the 2nd relief had to walk about 6 miles. For Lady Inglis a doolie was prepared; but she "unhesitatingly refused it, saying that she was well able to walk while so many wounded men and sick women were so much in need of a conveyance." This incident will not be found in her own diary.]

RESIDENCY CEMETERY.

- 862.—1857—(1) POLEHAMPTON, H. A. (2) POLEHAMPTON, H. S., Revd. Inscription:—In memory of Henry Stedman Polehampton, Chaplain of this station, born February 1st, 1824, died July 20th, 1857. Also of Henry Allnutt, his only child, born December 30th, 1856, died January 3rd, 1857. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.—Matthew, xxv, 21.

[Henry Stedman Polehampton (1824-1857), son of the Revd. Edward Polehampton, was educated at Eton and Pembroke College, Oxford (Fellow in 1846). In the same year he was ordained and became Rector of St. Aldate's, Oxford. In 1855 he became a Chaplain in the E.I.C.S. service, and in 1856 landed in Calcutta and was made Chaplain at Lucknow. Like the Anglo-Indian Padres all over the province—Moncrieff at Cawnpore, Jennings at Delhi, Campbell at Fatehgarh—he did his duties as bravely as the soldiers whom he attended. Severely wounded "whilst shaving" at the beginning of the siege, his enfeebled constitution succumbed to an attack of cholera. "The death of Mr. Polehampton was a serious loss: for that reverend gentleman had been unremitting in his kindness to the sick and wounded in hospital. From morning to night Mr. Polehampton was constantly by the bedside of some poor sufferer, inspiring him with confidence in Providence and hope in his recovery: or if hope was at an end, with the prospect of salvation in a better world. He never swerved from this self-imposed duty and only left the hospital to go to his meals." His services were gratefully acknowledged in the various orders passed by the military authorities and the Governor General.]

Sacred also to the memory of Kate Caroline Sophia, eldest child of the above, who died in Lucknow Garrison on the 23rd of September 1857. - 865.—1857—CLANCEY, T. J. Inscription:—Near this spot are interred the remains of Thomas John Clancey of the Chief Commissioner's office, Lucknow, who was killed during the siege of Lucknow on the 1st of July 1857, aged 28 years and 5 months.

This tomb has been erected by his beloved wife, Elizabeth Claucey, and subsequently renewed by his sons John, Charles and Dominic James. "Requiescat in pace."

- 866.—1857—LAWRENCE, H. M., Sir. Inscription:—Here lies Henry Lawrence who tried to do his duty. May the Lord have mercy on his soul. Born, 20th June 1806, died 4th July 1857.

[Henry Montgomery Lawrence (1806-1857), 4th son of Colonel Alexander Lawrence, was born in Ceylon. He was educated at Foyle College, Derry, Bristol and Addiscombe. He joined the Bengal Artillery in 1823. He served in Burma (1826) and was invalided home: on his return to India he joined the Revenue Survey of the North-Western Provinces (1833-38). He was Assistant to the Agent Governor-General on the North-West Frontier at Ferozpur in 1840, during the first Afghan War. He went with Pollock to Kabul in 1842, getting his brevet-majority. In 1843-06 he was Resident in Nepal. He was Agent Governor-General for the Punjab during the 1st Sikh War and present at Sohraon. He was Resident at Lahore in 1847 and compelled the surrender of Kashmir to Gulab Singh. In 1848 he was made K. C. B. In 1849 he was present at Multan and Chilianwala. He then became President of the Board of Administration of the Punjab and Agent Governor-General, in April 1849. When the Board broke up in 1853 he was transferred to Rajputana as Agent Governor-General. In 1854 he was made Aide-de-Camp to the Queen and Chief Commissioner of Oudh in 1857.]

His great work began in the Punjab. He was strongly opposed to annexation: yet, when it occurred, he carried it out loyally, and there ensued a "rule unsurpassed for efficiency." But differences arose between Henry and John

Lawrence: and Lord Dalhousie appointed the latter "as trained Civil Officer" to the Chief Commissionership of the Punjab. In the Mutiny he prepared with great skill and foresight for the defence of Lucknow (vide no. 852). The battle of Chinhat was a disaster, and Sir Henry himself admitted that he was the cause of it: it may be true, as one of his critics says, "that history has dealt very tenderly with Henry Lawrence in this matter, because he was Henry Lawrence," but it would take a great deal more than a single disaster to overshadow Henry Lawrence's fame. He was wounded almost as soon as the siege began. A shell had already burst in his room and Couper (his Private Secretary) and other friends implored him to change it. He said he was tired: he would do so next day: he jested on the subject, saying that sailors always considered the safest place in a ship was the hole made by the last shot. But another shell burst in the room, whilst he was lying down, and nearly took off his thigh. He was taken to Dr. (Sir Joseph) Fayer's house where he died two days later. An extract from Major Banks' diary given by Hutchinson shows that even on his deathbed he thought of everybody and everything to the smallest detail. Besides military directions, he directed that "every servant should be enrolled as a beldar or carrier of earth;" that every horse save enough for four guns and one other (his own) should be turned out of the entrenchment; that natives who were working were to be paid "liberally, double, quadruple;" that his servants should be given a year's wages. When he died a few soldiers were summoned to carry his corpse to burial. Before they lifted the couch on which it lay, one of them raised the coverlet and, stooping down, kissed the forehead of his dead general: and all the rest did the same.

It is unnecessary to ransack the dictionary with the historians for adjectives to describe him. The epitaph he chose for himself and this story show what manner of man he was. "A god-fearing, upright man, resolute and brave, powerful in mind, noble and generous-hearted," the "noblest hero of the old Bengal Artillery."

He was charitable to a fault as the history of the Lawrence Asylums for the children of British soldiers, which he founded, will prove. He was moreover a writer of considerable literary merit. After his death a provisional order appeared appointing him Governor General "on the death, resignation or coming away of Lord Canning." His son was made a baronet in honour of his father's services.

Sir Henry was the 4th son of Colonel Alexander Lawrence, who served at Seringapatam. His eldest surviving brother was Major-General Alexander William Lawrence of the Madras Cavalry (died 1868); and his other brothers, Lieutenant-General G. St. P. Lawrence, K.C.S.I., C.B., John, Lord Lawrence, and Major-General R. C. Lawrence, C.B., are all well known names in India. He married Honoria, daughter of the Reverend G. Marshall of Carndonagh, Co. [Mr. Thornhill was Assistant Commissioner before the siege, and did good work all through. On the 12th June he took part in the pursuit of a mutinous Oudh police regiment, and was wounded. He was again wounded during the siege. He got his death-wound as follows. He had volunteered to go out and fetch in the wounded after Havelock's arrival, and being well acquainted with Lucknow his offer was accepted. On his return he missed his way, and guided the bearers of the doolies into the square where Neill fell, now called "Doolie Square." They were met with a murderous fire. As soon as he found out his mistake, he rushed out to turn the rear doolies back. He was struck in the arm and the eye, and died on the 12th October.

- 886.—1857—FULTON, G. W. W., Captain. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Captain G. W. W. Fulton, Bengal Engineers, who was killed in the Residency during the siege of Lucknow on the 14th September 1857, aged 32 years.

[Captain Fulton did magnificent work during the defence of the Residency. It was he who constructed the Redan Battery. He collected a few ex-Cornish miners from the 32nd and was responsible for all the counter-mining. He would descend into a countermine and wait for the enemy's approach, revolver in hand. Somebody once asked a Sergeant, his right-hand man, if he were in the mine. "Yes Sir," was the reply : "there he has been the last two hours like a terrier at a rat-hole, and not likely to leave it all day." He says in his own diary that, on one occasion, "I found.....the rascals were at work in the roadIt seemed a bore to begin to counter, so I just put my head over the wall and called out in Hindustani a trifle of abuse.....when such a scuffle and bolt took place, I could not leave for laughing. They dropped it for good, that's the best of the joke." On another occasion he and a few sepoys captured a house : "I put two barrels of powder in it and retired, and to my disgust found some of the people who had gone with me loitering. The consequence was I was delayed, and the powder going off half buried me in ruins. A sepoy by my side was buried up to his waist and I got a very severe contusion....." True : but by no means the whole truth. He found the sepoys had loitered : he had fired the train and the danger was imminent. He made them mount the ladder first ; but the explosion took place before the last man could even start. His escape was marvellous ; and the act he so modestly relates was one of extraordinary generosity. But, as was said of another officer, Fulton deserved to be covered with Victoria Crosses from head to foot. On the 14th September he was struck dead by a round shot. He had won for himself the title his comrades gave him—"The defender of Lucknow." George William Wright Fulton, born 1825, son of Major R. B. Fulton (no. 381), married in 1840 Isabella Sophia, daughter of Major R. Wroughton (no. 369) and had five sons and a daughter, one of whom commanded the 1st Gurkha Rifles. The Indian branch of the family goes back to John Fulton, a Calcutta merchant, born 1716.]

352 non-commissioned officers, drummers and rank and file of the First Madras Fusiliers who fell during the suppression of the Rebellion in Bengal, 1857-58.

This monument is erected over the remains of the late Brigadier-General Neill by the surviving officers of the regiment, as a mark of esteem for their late comrades, and in remembrance of their noble example and glorious deeds.

[James George Smith Neill (1810-1857) was the son of Col. Neill. The family dates back to the middle of the 16th century and belongs to Burnwell, Co. Ayr. He had six sons, all in the army, and three daughters: his wife was Isabella, daughter of Col. William Ward, of Squerries Court, of the 5th B. N. C., and great-grand-niece of Lord Cornwallis. Educated at Ayr and Glasgow University, he joined the E. I. C.'s 1st European Regiment (Madras), in 1827. He was D.-A.-A.-G. in 1841 and served in the Burmese War; and as second in command of the Turkish contingent in the Crimean war, showed that Bashi Bazouks could be turned into good soldiers. He was sent to Calcutta with his regiment in 1857. As Adjutant and Colonel, he had turned it into a fine fighting machine. He was responsible for the disarming of the troops at Benares, and went on to Allahabad, where he restored order. Second-in-command to Havelock, he punished the mutineers at Cawnpore with great severity. He was left at Cawnpore till Outram arrived when he went on with him as Brigadier and was killed by a bullet through the head near the present Neill's Gateway in the First Relief. At this spot there stands an inscription as follows:—" Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori. This tablet marks the spot where towards the evening of the 28th September 1857, General Neill fell mortally wounded by a shot fired from the adjacent gateway." His monument at Ayr describes him as "a brave, resolute, self-reliant soldier, universally acknowledged as the first who stemmed the torrent of rebellion in Bengal."

Lt. Col. Stephenson (then Major) did good work in Havelock's battles of Cawnpore and Unao. He "showed throughout the day (at Unao) how the calmest forethought can be united with the utmost daring." He commanded a sortie, after the First Relief, to capture the Garden Battery, and was killed in demolishing houses round the Residency a little later.

Major Renaud left Allahabad on the 30th June with a force of 900 men for Cawnpore. He marched nearly to Fatehpur, pacifying the country and punishing rebels, and was then overtaken by Havelock's column. He distinguished himself at the battle of Fatehpur and also at Aung, where he was mortally wounded. Sydenham George Charles, son of C. Renaud, Merchant, was born in London in 1810.

Lieutenant Groom did good service at the capture of Phillips' House on the 2nd October 1857. It is not clear where he died. William Tate Groom, son of R. Groom, solicitor to the India Board, was born in 1831 and educated at Rugby.

Lieutenant Arnold distinguished himself with his skirmishers at the crossing of the Char Bridge in the First Relief: he was in the massacre at the Doolie Square, lying wounded in a doolie, and died a few days later (vide no. 883). Privates Ryan and McManus tried to save him; both got the V. C. He appears to be William Delafield Arnold, son of Dr. Arnold, the famous headmaster of Rugby, and was born in 1828. But if so he was only attached to the 1st M. F. There was an N. H. Arnold in that regiment, but apparently he was not killed. W. M. Hargood was son of Capt. W. Hargood, R. N., born at Seaford in 1833. I could trace none of the other officers.

Lieutenant Dobbs was killed at the storming of the Shah Najaf in the Second Relief.

The 1st Madras Fusiliers, now represented by the 1st Battalion, Royal Dublin Fusiliers, has a long and distinguished history. It existed in detached companies belonging to the H. E. I. C. as early as 1645, and is therefore of earlier date than even the premier regiment on the old Company roll—the 1st Bombay Europeans—raised by Charles II in 1661. It was consolidated into a battalion by Stringer Lawrence in 1748. It served under Clive at Arcot and Plassey; and all through the Lucknow Mutiny operations up to the capture. It has been successively known as the "Madras European Regiment" (1799), "1st Madras European Regiment," (1839), "1st Madras Fusiliers" (1843), and, on becoming a Queen's Regiment, 102nd Royal Madras Fusiliers (1862).]

H. L. Carleton, died of small-pox at Lucknow, 19th April 1858; Lieutenant R. D. Synge, died of consumption at Lucknow, 8th September 1858; Lieutenant N. Preston, died of his wounds at Alum Bagh, 27th September 1857; Ensign Arthur Chute, died of dysentery at Calcutta, 23rd February 1858; Ensign Hugh Gordon, died of coup de soleil at Lucknow, 26th May 1858; Assistant Surgeon R. Nelson, died of fever, 18th August 1857. Also to the memory of 271 non-commissioned officers and privates of the regiment, who fell in the gallant performance of their duty at the Relief, the Defence and the Capture of Lucknow, and during the subsequent campaign in Oudh.

[Colonel Robert P. Campbell, C. B., had won his C. B. in the Crimea. On the 25th September in the First Relief he did excellent service at the Char Bridge. He was left with about 100 men and all the wounded, heavy guns, &c., in a passage near the Moti Manzil Palace that night. Next day he was reinforced but had to stay there all day, and got out at night. He was shot in the knee, and died after amputation.

Major Barnston (1826-1857) was first left in command at Fatehpur and then sent up to his regiment at the Alum Bagh. He was dangerously wounded by the premature bursting of one of our shells at the taking of the Shah Najaf and died at Cawnpore. He was the eldest son of R. H. Barnston, of a family (Barnston of Crewe Hill) which dates back to Hugh de Bernstone of Edward I's time.

Lieutenant Robert Daly Syngé was 10th son of John Syngé of Glanmore, Co. Wicklow. The family dates back to one Millington "Cognominatus Sing, quia canonicus fuit," and his grandson, Richard Syngé, of Bridgnorth, Co. Salop, circa 1638.

Ensign Arthur Rowland Chute, born in 1838, was son of R. Chute J. P., D. L., of Chute Hall, Co. Kerry. The Chutes, said to be a branch of the Kentish Chutes, went to Ireland during the Desmond Rebellion, and obtained their present estates in 1630.

Major Perrin, Captain Denison (who was struck by two bullets in the arm and succumbed to amputation) and Lieutenants Nunn, Graham, Moultrie and Preston were all killed or severely wounded during the First Relief. Lieutenant Hugh Gordon was the eldest son of James Gordon of Manor, Co. Aberdeen, an estate purchased by his ancestor Hugh Gordon of the H.E. I.C.S. (1767-1834).

The 90th, now the 2nd Battalion, the Cameronians (Scottish Rifles) were with Havelock and Outram in the advance to the First Relief and in all the subsequent Lucknow operations.]

900—1857-8.—OFFICERS AND MEN, 84TH REGIMENT. Inscription.—To the memory of Lieutenant-Colonel C. Seymour, Captain E. Currie, Captain R. Pakenham, Lieutenant B. Sandwith, Lieutenant F. Saunders, Lieutenant H. Ayton, Lieutenant P. Chute, Lieutenant A. Gibaut, Lieutenant W. Poole, Lieutenant R. Maybury, Ensign H. Kenny, Paymaster G. Eddy, Quartermaster H. Donelan, and 360 non-commissioned officers and privates of the 84th York and Lancaster Regiment, who were killed, died of their wounds or of disease during the Indian Mutiny Campaign, nobly performing their duty. To record the devotion, gallantry and true discipline displayed by the above at all times and upon all occasions, this monument is erected by the officers of the regiment.

[Lieutenant-Colonel Seymour was a Captain at the siege of Lucknow and officiated as Q.-M.-G. It is not known where he died.

Captain Currie was killed at Havelock's battle of Cawnpore (16th July 1857).

Captain Pakenham, "an able officer and devoted soldier," fell whilst entering the city in the First Relief (25th September 1857). He was the 4th son of Sir Hercules Pakenham, K.C.B., who distinguished himself in the Peninsular War, and grandson of the 2nd Lord Longford. Lieutenants Gibaut and Poole were also killed during that relief.

Lieutenant Sandwith, acting Field Engineer, did good service at the Alum Bagh during the First Relief and was killed during the second.

Lieutenant Ayton was mentioned in despatches after the battle of Fatehpur ; it is not known where he died. Lieutenant Chute was wounded in Outram's 4th action at the Alum Bagh on the 25th February 1858.

Lieutenant Saunders was killed in the defence of Cawnpore. It is not known where the rest died.

Henry Kenny and his brother Edward (also in the 84th) were sons of Colonel E. Kenny, 89th Regiment, of Ballynarn, Co. Wicklow. The family is of French Huguenot extraction and settled in Ireland about 1660.

The 84th had detachments at both the defences of Lucknow and Cawnpore. Other detachments were in Havelock's column, and in action at Fatehpur, Unao, Bashirgaon, Bithur and the First Relief. They stayed in garrison in Lucknow till the Second Relief. They were raised in 1758, and were in India from 1758-1758, 1733, 1842-1859, 1897-1902. Their Indian honours are "India" (with Royal Tiger) and "Lucknow;" they are now the 2nd Battalion of the York and Lancaster Regiment. They also fought at the Nile and in Egypt 1882.]

[Major Simmons was in the Moti Manzil with Colonel Campbell, 90th Light Infantry (vide no. 899) whom he reinforced. He was killed during the Second Defence (Outram's) in a sortie from the left square Brigade Moss on the 29th September 1857. Captain L'Estrange was the officer who lent his men without orders to assist Vincent Eyre to relieve Arrah House when besieged by Kunwar Singh.]

Captain Johnson did good service at Kundan Patti under Major Eyre and at Lucknow: he and Captain L'Estrange were both wounded severely in the First Relief. Lieutenant Haig and Captain Carter were both killed in the First Relief. Captain Carter (William Maroon, 1827-1857) was the second and eldest surviving son of John Langham Carter of Worthwood, a family dating back to 1692. Lieutenant Brown did good service at the seizure of the Phillip's Garden Battery where he captured two 9-pounders in the Second (Outram's) Defence. It is not known where he was killed. For Lieutenant Haig, cf. no. 917.

The 5th Fusiliers, now the Northumberland Fusiliers or "Fighting Fifth," were with Outram's force in the Second Relief. Outram's Defence of the Alum Bagh and with Windham at Cawnpore. Their Indian honours are "Lucknow" and "Afghanistan 1878-80." They also fought in the Peninsula and at Khar-toulm.]

Army, who died at Lucknow, 3rd April 1858. This stone is erected by his friend, Revd. H. Smith, D.D., Chaplain of the Field Hospital.

[Hyacinth Kirwan (1820 1858) was the 4th and youngest son of Patrick Kirwan of Cregg, Co. Galway. He was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge (Fellow). He was given an Indian Chaplaincy in 1848. He founded a fund in the Calcutta diocese, called the 'Kirwan and Kay fund.' This originated in a bequest by the Rev. H. Kirwan, when a Chaplain in Bengal, which was increased by a donation from Revd. Dr. Kay, formerly Principal of Bishop's College. The interest of the fund is employed for maintaining a native reader or clergyman in the neighbourhood of Bishop's College." He was learned in Eastern languages and from his earliest days was devoted to reading and study. When the Bishop of Lincoln founded the "Voluntary Theological Examination" early in the forties, he and one other were the only two that passed—possibly the only two that appeared at the examination. It is dubious whether he is actually buried at this spot as he died of small-pox in one of the field hospitals at the final siege of Lucknow. The family settled in Galway in 1488.]

[During the final reduction of Lucknow a quantity of powder in tin cases and leather bags was found in a yard behind the Jama Masjid. Outram directed it to be destroyed by the Engineers. It was taken to a large and deep well as rapidly as possible. When one of them was being thrown down it struck the side of the well and exploded. A flame of fire flashed up, ignited case after case, caught the powder in the carts and blew it up, killing or severely wounding 2 officers and 14 men.

ON NEILL'S ROAD.

908.—1857—VICTIMS FROM SITAPUR. Inscription :—On south face.—Sacred to the memory of (1) Sir Mountstuart Jackson, Bart ; (2) Captain Patrick Orr ; (3) Lieutenant G. J. H. Burnes, 1st Bombay European Fusiliers ; (4) Sergeant-Major Mortan.—Victims of 1857.—On north face.—Sacred to the memory of (1) G. P. Carew, Esq. ; (2) Mrs. Greene ; (3) Miss Jackson and others, European and Native, faithful servants of Government. Victims of 1857.

[Captain Orr was First Assistant Commissioner at Muhamdi in Kheri, a district corresponding to a part of the modern district. On the arrival of the Shahjahanpur fugitives, a body of troops was sent from Sitapur to escort them to that place : and Orr went with them. On the road, however, occurred the massacre of Aurangabad (vide no. 976). Orr was spared by the intervention of some troops which he had himself raised and escaped to Mitauli, where he had already sent his wife and child. Here he was joined a few days later by those who had escaped from Sitapur, Sir M. Jackson (Assistant Commissioner) and his sister, Lieutenant Burnes, Sergeant-Major Mortan and Sophy Christian, a child of Mr. Christian, the Commissioner. They were protected by Raja Loni Singh till the 6th August, though in constant fear of treachery on his part. On that date he turned them out of his fort, a piece of deliberate treachery, for, though he would not give up the fugitives, he turned them adrift and told the sepoys where they were. They remained, however, in the jungles in safety till the 20th October, when they were arrested by 800 men of the Raja's, under a scoundrel named Zahur-ul-Husain, whom Captain Orr had actually befriended. The men were heavily fettered and taken to Lucknow, and imprisoned in the Kasarbagh in a miserable room in an out-house. They were shown some kindness however, by Wajid Ali, a steward of one of the ex-king's wives, and Raja Man Singh ; and their fetters were removed. Here they remained until the arrival of Sir Colin Campbell with the second Relieving Force. On the 16th November, the men were taken away by some of the 71st Regiment and shot. The ladies were spared : little Sophy Christian died on the 24th November, but the rest were rescued by Wajid Ali and handed over to Sir J. Outram on the 20th March.

As regards the rest, their story is as follows. Captain J. B. Hearsey was saved by some of his men of the Military Police as well as Miss Jackson (another sister of Sir M. Jackson), Mrs. Greene, wife of Lieutenant Greene of the 9th Oudh Irregulars, and Sergeant-Major Rogers, his wife and step-son named Sullivan. They were allowed to go and travelled first to Oel and thence, on hearing from Mr. Gonne, to Mallanpur. With Mr. Gonne were Messrs. Carew and Brand of the Rosa Factory in Shahjahanpur. They started down the river in boats but news of mutineers at Bairanghat compelled them to return to Mathiara, a village of the Raja of Dhaurahra. Here they remained two months, the party consisting of Miss Jackson and Mrs. Greene, Captains Hearsey and Hastings, Messrs. Gonne, Brand and Carew, Sergeant-Major Rogers and his wife, Mr. Brown, a writer, and Mr. Sullivan. The Raja of Dhaurahra (the Raja was a minor) was as treacherous as the Raja of Mitauli, and the band agreed to be taken to Lucknow ; but suspecting treachery on the road, they fled to Khairgarh. They were pursued, but night came on and they managed to escape. Here the party was separated ; Mr. Carew and Mrs. Rogers and her son were on an elephant, and got ahead. We need not follow the adventures of the rest except to say that all but Captain Hearsey perished. Mr. Brown was seized by an alligator in swimming a river, Mr. Gonne died of jungle fever, Captain Hastings also died of fever, while Brand and Rogers also died somewhat later.

The ladies and Mr. Carew eventually fell into the hands of the Rani of Dhaurahra and were sent into Lucknow. They were at first well treated and placed in the Kaisarbagh, but "after an unsuccessful attack on the Alum Bagh" (which was either, probably, in Havelock and Outram's advance or during Macintyre's occupation of it—i.e., either in the last week of September or first week of October 1857), they were dragged out and murdered in a nullah near the Tara Kothi (present Bank of Bengal), with 22 others of whom 17 were Europeans or Eurasians. Of the "others" not named one was Sullivan, Roger's step-son; another was possibly Mrs. Rogers unless she had already perished, for she was not named in a memorandum provided by Wajid Ali, and he also names Mr. Coldayra, a writer, as belonging to the party.

The form of this memorial was apparently that suggested by Capt. Hutchinson; merely the names with the addition "victims of 1857." Sir Mountstuart Goodriche Jackson (1836-1857) 3rd Baronet was educated at Eton and Haileybury and entered the C. S. in 1856. He was the eldest son of Sir Keith Jackson, 2nd Baronet, A.-D.-C. to Mountstuart Elphinstone, and then to Sir John Macdonald in Persia. The family is an old Cumberland family. The sister who was murdered was Miss Amelia Georgina Jackson; the one who escaped, Anna Madeline, married her cousin Elphinstone Jackson, Judge of the Calcutta High Court (d. 1873). George James Holmes, son of J. Burnes, Residency Surgeon at Bhojpur in Cutch, was born in 1830 and educated at Edinburgh Academy.]

Waiting the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ.

[Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General, assisting Lord Roberts. During Sir Colin Campbell's relief heavy firing was heard unexpectedly from Banks' House. Roberts and Mayne galloped off to find out the cause; but became separated. Mayne was then seen to fall, shot through the breast. Roberts looked that evening for his body in vain: next morning he found it in a dooli at the Martinière. He buried him at once with the aid of some gunners and some other officers "just as he was, in his blue frock coat and long boots, his eyeglass in his eye as he always carried it." His sword Roberts took away and made over to his family. On a tree over the grave he cut the initials "A. O. M." "not very deep for there was little time." But they remained long enough for the present stone to be erected. The spot is south of the metalled road passing through the Park.]

- 913.—1858—HODSON, W. S. R. Major. Inscription :—Here lieth all that could die of William Stephen Raikes Hodson, Captain and Brevet-Major, 1st E. B. Fusiliers, and Commandant of Hodson's Horse, son of the Ven'ble George Hodson, Archdeacon of Stafford. Born March 19th, 1821, fell in the final assault at Lucknow, March 11th, 1858.

A little while. II Cor. iv, 12.

[This tomb lies north of the road leading to the College near the College Hospital. William Stephen Raikes Hodson (1821-1858), son of the Revd. George Hodson, was educated at Rugby and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took his B. A. in 1844. In 1845 he joined the army and fought at Mudki, Ferozshahr and Sohraon. In 1847 he became 2nd in command of the Guides and Assistant to the Resident at Lahore. In the 2nd Sikh war he was engaged with the Guides in partisan warfare, and was also at Gujrat on Sir H. Gough's staff. He then became Assistant Commissioner in the Punjab. In 1852 he married Susan, daughter of Capt. Henry R.N., and widow of John Mitford, of Exbury; and the same year succeeded Lumsden in command of the Guides and also held civil charge of Yuzafzai. He built the fort at Mardan and saw much frontier fighting. In 1855 he was reverted to his regiment (the 1st E. B. F.) on account of certain inaccuracies in the regimental accounts and other grounds. When the Mutiny broke out General Anson made him head of the Intelligence Department, and ordered him to raise a regiment of irregular horse. At this time occurred his famous ride of 152 miles from Karnal to Meerut and back again, with despatches. He took a prominent share in the Delhi operations, and wound up his services by the capture of Bahadur Shah, the Emperor, and his three sons, whom he killed with his own hand. He then took part in minor operations in Rewari, and the Meerut and Agra divisions, during which occurred his second famous ride—Mainpuri to Miran Ki Sarai and back to Bewar, 94 miles in all. He was wounded at Shamsabad and was in all Sir Colin Campbell's operations up to the reduction of Lucknow. He was mortally wounded in the assault on the Begam's Kothi, whilst leading some Highlanders to attack a strongly fortified room. He died on the 12th March.

His life was a continual series of adventures. Men used to wonder why he never got the V. C.; one explanation was that he won it every day of his life. Controversy rages round certain incidents of his career; whatever the truth may be about these matters, it is certain that he was loved and respected by great men such as Seaton, Campbell, Norman, Lord Napier, Lawrence, Currie and Montgomery and idolized by soldiers, whether his old guides, who sat about his house merely "to look at the sahib," or the Highlanders who fetched each other to "come and see Hodson." He was the perfection of a cavalry soldier, a born partisan leader, a man who not only could lead the rawest of raw recruits (as they said themselves) into hell but out again on the other side. When he raised Hodson's Horse, enough men flocked to his standard to raise three regiments, though only one was required. Two regiments, the 9th and 10th Lancers, still exist to keep the memory of Hodson and his Horse green. If some critics must insist that his name points a moral, none venture to deny that it adorns many a tale.]

LA MARTINIÈRE COLLEGE.

915.—1800—MARTIN, C., Major-General. Inscription.—Here lies Claude Martin, born at Lyons, the 5th day of January 1735. Arrived in India as a common soldier and died at Lucknow, the 13th September 1800, a Major-General. Pray for his soul.

[Claude Martin (1735-1800) was son of a French silk manufacturer of Lyons. He was intended for the same calling, but preferred a more adventurous profession and enlisted in the French Army. In 1757 Lally, when appointed Governor of Pondicherry, applied for volunteers for his bodyguard and Martin offered himself and was accepted. He arrived in India in 1758. Lally's discipline was extremely severe and his behaviour tyrannical; his conduct may have been necessary for many of his bodyguard were military criminals and deserters; but it only made them more insubordinate; and when Coote laid siege to Pondicherry the bodyguard deserted to the English en masse. Martin volunteered to raise a corps of French chasseurs for the Company from among the prisoners of war. The proposal was accepted, and he was made its commander with the rank of Ensign. On one occasion he and his corps were shipwrecked on their way to Bengal; and it was with the greatest difficulty that he saved them in the boats. He became Captain in due course: but his men mutinied in 1764, and the corps was broken up. Martin did his best to keep them faithful: and as a reward he was given an appointment in the N.-E. districts of Bengal, which, being an able draftsman, he was sent to survey. Later he obtained a similar position in Oudh. At Lucknow he spent his leisure in mechanics, and amongst other things manufactured "the first balloons that ever floated in the air of Asia." This brought him to the Nawab's notice, who came to think so highly of him, and especially of his skill in gunnery, that he obtained permission for Martin's services to be transferred to him: and on his request being granted made him superintendent of his park of artillery and arsenal.

Martin soon ingratiated himself with the Nawab, and became his confidential adviser. He contrived to remain always on the right side and made himself indispensable in negotiations between the Nawab and the Company. Wisely preferring the substance of power to its shadow, he remained in the background: but he had more real influence on politics than the ministers.

Martin of course drew large pay and enjoyed extensive sources of emolument. He was the recognized channel for petitions, and made large sums in this way. He taught the Nawab to appreciate European articles, and then acted as go-between in obtaining them. He had profitable transactions with the native bankers. Finally his position was so secure that in troublous times it was with him that valuables were deposited for security on a commission. He acquired consequently an immense fortune.

During his life he was hospitable in an unostentatious way: his chief vanity was military rank—a fact to which his epitaph bears witness. He had retained his commission in the Company's service, though relinquishing his pay and allowances, and he rose in the ordinary course. His Colonelcy he obtained in 1790 by presenting the Company with sufficient fine horses to mount a troop: and when, in 1790, the Company's officers were granted brevet rank by the King, he was made a Major-General to his infinite delight.

His house, "Constantia," was a castellated edifice designed for defence if necessary and constructed on strictly hygienic principles. It had a series of rooms adapted to the various temperatures of different seasons. One room was designed as vault for his tomb. He built this because the Nawab refused to pay him the price he asked for the house: and in a fit of pique he declared that his tomb should be handsomer than any palace in Oudh. It was called "Constantia," from the motto "Labor et constantia" carved on its front.

His will, which he drew up himself, was an extraordinary production. It began by a confession that self-interest had guided him through life. His fortune of 88 lakhs of rupees was almost entirely bequeathed to charity. There were legacies to the poor of Calcutta, Chandranagore, Lucknow and Lyons, the interest of which was to be doled out daily at certain fixed places marked by tablets notifying that the alms were the gift of General Martin and were to be so distributed in perpetuity. He left a large sum in trust to the Government of Bengal to establish and endow a school to be called La Martinière in Calcutta, which still exists. Other legacies were to his relatives and the town of Lyons, and also two sums, to Lyons and Calcutta, to be devoted to releasing poor debtors from jail on the anniversary of his death. His house "Constantia" was never to be sold but to serve as a mausoleum for his remains, and as a college for educating children in the English religion and language. He also gave elaborate instructions for his own burial and epitaph. Fanny Parkes mentions that, in 1831, a bust of the General adorned the vault and lights were constantly burned before the tomb. The figures of four sphinxes large as life, with their arms reversed, stood in niches at the sides of the tomb. Mrs. Harris states that the tomb was broken to fragments in the Mutiny and "his old bones scattered to the winds"; but if so it has since been restored. "Dynasties have died out, thrones have tottered and fallen, kingdoms have crumbled into dust and been forgotten since this private soldier sought to perpetuate his name, and it is not an unpleasant thought that.... his testamentary charity still keeps alive the pious memory of the founder of La Martinière;" a memory which generations of Anglo-Indian parents and children have had cause to bless.]

- 917.—1857 HAIG, E., Lieutenant. Inscription:—"In memory of Edwin Haig, Lieutenant and Adjutant of the 5th Fusiliers, who was killed by a round shot at the attack on the city of Lucknow on the 25th September 1857, aged about 20 years. This stone is erected by the officers, non-commissioned officers and privates of the 5th Fusiliers."

[Cf. no. 901. Edwin Fell Haig was born in 1834, and therefore was 23 not "about" 20 when he died. He was the 5th son of Robert Haig of Dundalk. Many of this family (Haig of Bemersyde) have served in India from the time of this officer's uncle, who was a Madras Judge, circa 1810, and married the daughter of the Magistrate of Pondicherry. A cousin, J. F. Haig, was serving in the 90th Light Infantry all through the Mutiny; and two brothers were in the Indian Army. There are representatives of the family (though in another branch—the Haigs of Pen-lthou) serving in India at the present moment, and one in this province. The family is extremely ancient and traces its ancestry back to Peter de Haga of Bemersyde, circa 1150. A century later Thomas the Rhymer prophesied of them: "Tyde what may betyde Haig shall be Haig of Bemersyde." The 17th laird of Bemersyde disposed of Bemersyde to his brother William. William was identified as the author of the "Supplication" in 1638, fled to Holland and left Bemersyde to his nephew, David. From him after six generations the succession reverted to the present owner, younger brother of E. F. Haig, in 1866; he is a descendant of the 17th laird already mentioned, through his second son. The Haigs of Blair-Hill, Pen-lthou and Ramonie are also all lineal descendants of this 17th laird. The earliest Haig who came to India was the 10th son of this same laird, the 17th; he is said to have gone there in 1689.]

- 918.—1857—HAVELOCK, H., Major-General Sir. Inscription:—"Here rest the mortal remains of Henry Havelock, Bart Major-General in the British Army, Knight Commander of the Bath, who died at Dilkusha, Lucknow, of dysentery produced by the hardships of a campaign, in which he achieved immortal fame, on the 24th November 1857. He was born on the 5th April 1795, at Bishop Wearmouth, County Durham, England. Entered the Army 1815, came to India 1823, and served there with little interruption till his death. He bore an honourable part in the wars of Burmah, Afghanistan, the Maharatta Campaign of 1843 and the Sutlej of 1845-46. Retained by adverse circumstances during many years in a subordinate position, it was the aim of his life to prove that the profession of a Christian is consistent with the fullest discharge of the duties of a soldier. He commanded a Division in the Persian Expedition of 1857. In the terrible convulsion of that year his genius and character were at length fully developed and known to the world. Saved from shipwreck on the Ceylon coast by that Providence which designed him for yet greater things, he was nominated to the command of the column destined to relieve the brave garrison of Lucknow. This object, after almost superhuman exertions, he, by the blessing of God, accomplished. But he was not spared to receive on earth the reward so dearly earned. The Divine Master whom he served saw fit to remove him from the sphere of his labours in the moment of his greatest triumph. He departed to his rest in humble but confident expectation of greater rewards than those which a grateful country was anxious to bestow. In him the skill of a commander, the courage and devotion of a soldier, the learning of a scholar, the grace of a high bred gentleman, and all the social and domestic virtues of a husband, father and friend, were blended together and strengthened, harmonized and adorned by the spirit of a true Christian: the result of the influence of the Holy Spirit on his heart and a humble reliance on the merits of a crucified Saviour.

I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the Righteous Judge, shall give me that day, and not to me only, but to all those that love his appearance.

His ashes in a peaceful urn shall rest,
His name a greater sample stands to show,
How strangely high endeavours may be blest,
Where piety and valour jointly go.

This monument is erected by his sorrowing widow and family.

[Henry Havelock (1795-1857), son of William Havelock of Haverley, Kent, and Jane, daughter of John Carter of Yarm, Yorkshire, was born at Wearmouth and educated at Swanscombe and the Charterhouse. He entered at the Middle Temple, but in 1815 joined the 95th (Rifle Brigade) and studied his profession with diligence both practically and theoretically. He exchanged into the 13th Light Infantry and then came out to India, where he served with credit as D. A. A. G. of the Burma expedition, and in 1828 published his "Campaigns in Ava," whilst Adjutant of the depot of King's troops at Chinsura. The work was scholarly, and showed clear mastery of detail: but his severe strictures made him many enemies. In 1829 he married Hannah Shepherd, daughter of Dr. Marshman, the celebrated Baptist Missionary at Serampur, which community he joined. In 1838 he became a captain, and joined the staff of Sir W. Cotton in the Kabul expedition. He played a not obscure part both in the storming of Ghazni and the defence of Jalalabad. He wrote a memoir of the war which attracted no attention, though it deserved a better fate. In 1841 he returned to Kabul as Persian interpreter on the staff of General Elphinstone. He was with Sir R. Sale on his march to Jalalabad and was present in the siege and at the defeat of Akbar Khan in 1842. He next became D. A. A. G. of the Infantry Division. For his services in Afghanistan he was made C.B.]

In 1843 he became Major. He was appointed to Sir H. Gough's staff and did conspicuous service at Maharajpur, being made Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel. In the 1st Sikh War he was at Mudki, Ferozshahr and Sohraon. He then became D.A.G. of the Queen's troops in Bombay. In 1849 he took furlough and on his return took up his old post. In 1854 he became Q. M.-G. of the Queen's troops in India, Lieutenant-Colonel and Brevet Colonel. In 1855 he became A.-G.; and in 1856-57 commanded a division in the Persian War. When peace was signed, he returned to Bombay and there heard the news of the Mutiny. He sailed for Calcutta, but was wrecked off Ceylon. In Calcutta he was made Brigadier-General and on the 25th June, set off up country, to commence the marvellous march which saved Lucknow. He fought action after action: six between the 12th and 29th July: three between the 4th and 16th August: and finally left Cawnpore with Outram on the 21st September, fought two actions, and by the 25th had relieved Lucknow. There he stayed till Sir Colin Campbell again relieved it; and on the 17th November Outram, Havelock and Campbell met on the ground sloping down to the Mess House. "Havelock, the hero of a Hundred fights," says Lord Roberts, "looked ill, worn and depressed, but brightened up a little when Norman told him he had been made a K. C. B." On the 24th November he died and was buried in the Alum Bagh. So ended Havelock's five months of glorious history.

In character he was simple and austere; a man of the strongest religious convictions, yet no bigot: reserved, yet liked by many wild young officers who had little in common with him. A true Christian, who expounded the Bible to his men in spite of the ridicule of his brother officers, who called his company "Havelock's Saints"—yet he never forgot his military instincts: if he taught his men to be good men he taught them also to be good soldiers, and if "Havelock's Saints" were never drunk, they were always ready for service. All his life his ambition had been to command a British Army in the field: and all his life he had studied to that end. "He was familiar with every axiom of Vauban and Jomini: he could describe from memory every evolution of Marlborough and Wellington, Frederick and Napoleon." He could apply them too, as he applied the strategy of "old Frederick at Luthen," in his battle of Cawnpore. In the words of his epitaph: "It was the aim of his life to prove that the profession of a Christian is consistent with the fullest discharge of the duties of a soldier."

Years before Lord Hardinge had said of him: "If India is ever in danger the Government have only to put Havelock in command of an army, and it will be saved." Yet in 1857 nobody out of India had ever heard of Havelock: even in India they sneered at him as "an old fossil, dug up and only fit to be turned into pipe-clay." He left Calcutta on the 25th June little better than a nobody; when he died, on the 24th November, his name was known all over the English-speaking world, so that the flags were hung at half-mast in New York when he died.

His son (vide no. 921) was given the baronetcy and pension destined for his father. Of his three brothers two, Lieutenant-Colonel W. Havelock, K. H., killed at Ramnagar in the Sikh War 1848, and Thomas, died of fever in the Peninsular War, lost their lives on active service. The third, Lieutenant-Colonel C. F. Havelock, fought at Bhurtpore, in the first Afghan War and in the first Sikh War, and commanded the Irregular Osmanli Cavalry. His son, Lieutenant C. W. Havelock, was killed in the Mutiny (vide no. 788). Lieutenant-Colonel W. Havelock's son, Sir Arthur E. Havelock, G.C.M.G., G.C.S.I., G.O.I.E., was Governor of Ceylon (1890-5), Madras (1895-1900) and Tasmania (1901-4).]

fought all through the Oudh campaign, and became Erevet-Major and Lieu-

This simple inscription is erected by his sorrowing relations in memory of his simple virtues as a Christian and his noble conduct as a soldier.

[This and the next tomb are in a small enclosure west of the road leading to the race-course. Captain McDonald was killed in the assault on the Begam's Kothi. "Although he had been a captain for some years, he was still almost a boy." He was wounded early in the day by a splinter of a shell in his right arm but remained with his company, led it through the breach, and was shot down inside, through the throat. He was third son of General Sir John McDonald, K.C.B., of Dalchosmie, Perthshire. This family, one of soldiers ever since Culloden, descends from John, Lord of the Isles and his wife, the daughter of Robert II of Scotland. Strangers, respect the lonely resting-place of the brave. Re-erected 1877.

[Captain Sandford did some brave deeds during the Mutiny. When Hodson was carrying out his famous ride from Karnal to Meerut he met Sandford, who was riding from Meerut to Karnal. Hodson's ride has become historic : by an irony of fate Sandford's is recorded merely in the mention of his arrival in a despatch and in a footnote. He commanded the Guides Cavalry at Delhi and was twice mentioned in despatches. He later took Younghusband's place in command of his squadron of the 5th Punjab Cavalry and was killed in clearing a village during Outram's operations at the capture of Lucknow. C. He met the enemy in some force and his cavalry—Bays, 9th Lancers and 2nd Punjab Cavalry—charged them. The Bays were young soldiers, and "intoxicated with blood," rode into the infantry posts, where their commander, Percy Smith, was shot, Cornet Sneyd and Corporal

Goad made a gallant attempt to rescue his body but failed. It was found next day and the remains buried in a grove.]

- 934.—1858—WALE, F., Captain. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Captain F. Wale, who raised and commanded the 1st Sikh Irregular Cavalry, killed in action at Lucknow on the 21st March 1858. This monument is erected by Captain L. B. Jones, Acting-Commandant, 1st Sikh Irregular Cavalry, as a token of regard for his officer, whom he admired both as a friend and a soldier. Captain Wale lived and died a Christian soldier.

[This occurred during the pursuit of the enemy after Lucknow had been reduced. Brigadier Campbell by some misconception did not send his cavalry in pursuit till too late, and after a stern chase of several miles Wale gave the order to halt. "Then from the far side of a ravine, a solitary figure fired his musket at a group of officers" and killed Wale, shooting him in the throat and mouth. In a few minutes "to the deep grief of his officers and men, by whom he was loved as few commanding officers are ever loved, poor Wale breathed his last." Frederick Wale (1822—1858) was the 8th son of General Sir C. Wale, K.C.B., of H. M.'s 33rd Regiment, out of a family of 16. The family belongs to Shelford and traces its descent to Richard Fitz Wale of Eydon, temp. Henry II.]

[Sufficient justice has seldom been done to Outram's defence of the Alam Bagh between the 2nd relief and the capture of Lucknow. His position extended from the Alam Bagh to Ram Bagh and thence across to Jalalabad on one side and also east, a circuit of about 11 miles. He was to keep the rebels at Lucknow in check, and had some 4,000 men to do it with: whilst of rebels there were about 120,000. He was attacked in force six times, and successfully repulsed all attacks. The 5th Fusiliers was one of his regiments and did good service (Cf. also nos. 901 and 937.) The village of Bargawan was included in his lines and the 5th Fusiliers were posted close to it.]

John Collins (?—1907) joined the E. I. C.'s Bengal infantry in 1770, and became Major in 1794. He was Resident at the Court of Daulat Rao Sindhia from 1795-1803. He possessed great influence over him : but failed to dissuade him from fighting the British Government. When Sindhia was secretly mediating as the result of the Treaty of Bassain he succeeded in obtaining the truth, and it was largely as a result of his discoveries that war was declared. In 1799 he went on a mission to Jaipur and there Wazir Ali, the murderer of Mr. Cherry (vide no. 594.) surrendered to him. He was subsequently Resident at Lucknow. He is described as "cold, imperious and over-bearing," and was nicknamed "King Collins."]

(Formerly Sergeant-Major of the 16th Lancers. He was appointed Sergeant of Ratcliffe's Volunteers. With four others, a Lieutenant of Bengal N. I., an ex-private of the 32nd and two native officers of the 7th N. C.—of such heterogeneous material were those volunteers composed—he charged 18 rebel troopers in the reconnaissance before the battle of Chinhat. Whilst retreating from Chinhat he remained "at least 20 yards in the rear, and coming on at a gentle trot only. He was shot through the head whilst endeavouring to strengthen the Brigade Mess. That morning he had jestingly told his wife that the bullet had not yet been moulded that was to hit him. His body was rescued by a party of volunteers under heavy fire. He was a noble and gallant fellow, an excellent husband, a fond father, and a staunch friend: a practical philosopher, always gay and smiling.")

- 962.—1857—FRANKLAND, T., Lieutenant. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Thomas Frankland, Esq., Lieutenant, 48th Madras Native Infantry, and second in command of 2nd Panjab Infantry, who fell at the head of his regiment at the storming of the Alam Bagh during the relief of Lucknow, the eldest surviving son of Sir Frederick Frankland, eighth Baronet of Thirkely, County York.

I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me.

The Lord is my strength and my shield.

[There is a curious mis-statement in this inscription. Lieut. Frankland was killed whilst leading a company of the 2nd Panjab Infantry to the assault of a tower in the Sikandra Bagh (according to Burke) during the Second Relief of Lucknow. The Alam Bagh had been in our hands ever since the First Relief. Lieut. Frankland was twice wounded at Delhi. The Franklands are an ancient Yorkshire family dating back to Edward III. Sir F. Frankland served all through the Peninsular and Waterloo campaigns.]

N.B.—Burke says Lieut. Frankland was killed on the 17th November. This date must be wrong if he was killed at the Sikandra Bagh, which was taken on the 15th. The Mess House and Moti Mahal were taken on the 17th, and the Panjab Infantry were in both assaults.]

- 963.—1857-58—OFFICERS AND MEN, 93rd HIGHLANDERS. Inscription :—Erected by the officers, non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the 93rd Sutherland Highlanders, in memory of their comrades who fell in action, or died of wounds or of disease caused by fatigue and exposure during the suppression of the Mutiny in India in 1857-58. Killed in action :—Officers 5 ; non-commissioned officers and soldiers 45. Died of wounds :—Officer 1 ; non-commissioned officers and soldiers 36. Died of disease :—Officer 1 ; non-commissioned officers and soldiers 83.

[This very famous regiment, now the 2nd Battalion, Princess Louise's Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders, was raised in 1800. They were in India from 1857 to 1870 and again from 1891. Their only Indian honour, however, is "Lucknow." They were Sir C. Campbell's Highlanders : he had been with them in the Crimea and they looked on him as one of their clan. They were at the battle of Khujwa, at the Lucknow relief operations where they were prominent, at the capture of the Sikandrabad, the Shah Najif and the Begam Kotli. They fought again at Cawnpore and again at the reduction of Lucknow ; and everywhere they did magnificently. Of the officers killed (6), Captain Dalzell, Captain Macdonald, Lieutenant Sergison and Lieutenant Sterling, with Brigadier Hope, make 5. The 6th is possibly Captain Lumsden, attached.]

I., who were killed at Lucknow in the campaigns of 1857-1858. This tablet is dedicated by their brother officers.

[John Tower Lumsden, son of H. Lumsden, advocate, Aberdeen, was born in 1823. He was attached as interpreter to the 93rd Highlanders and was one of the first to enter the Sikandrabad—according to Lord Roberts, the fifth, being preceded by a Highlander, a Punjabi, Lieutenant Cooper and Colonel Ewart. He was shot dead inside. Colonel Ewart said that he would have tried to get him the V. C. had he lived. Jonathan (not John) Cape, was son of T. Cape of Cheltenham, born at Ashby La Touche in 1838, and nephew of the Revd. Jonathan Cape, for over 30 years senior professor of Addiscombe. Lieutenant Cape was Assistant Baggage Master to the Engineer Brigade and was killed on the 20th March 1858.]

965.—1858—HARDINGE, G. N., Captain. Inscription :—In memory of Captain George Nicholas Hardinge, late 45th B. N. I., and Commandant, 3rd Oude Irregular Cavalry. He served in the Sutlej and Punjab campaigns ; he commanded the Sikh Cavalry and acted as Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General throughout the defence of Lucknow. From the wounds and privations endured in that memorable siege, he died at the Sandheads, March 16th, 1858. Aged 29 years.

[Captain Hardinge did excellent service all through the defence of Lucknow. When the Mutiny broke out he patrolled the lines with a few cavalry in spite of a wound, and also pursued the mutineers with a few faithful troopers. He covered the retreat from Chinhath and was mentioned in despatches for it. He commanded the Sikh Square and Cavalry in the defence, and also acted as Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General. He also distinguished himself in several sorties during both defences. George Nicholas Hardinge (1828-1858) was son of General R. Hardinge, K.H., and nephew of the first Viscount Hardinge.]

This tablet is erected by his bereaved and widowed mother to a son greatly beloved and deeply mourned by his sorrowing family and friends.

967.—1857-59—OFFICERS AND MEN, 2ND D.G.S. Inscription :—In memory of Brigadier-General William Campbell, C.B., Major

John Percy Smith, Major John Griffith Price, Captain Orlando Frederick Cavendish Bridgeman, Captain Robert Blair, V.C., Cornet William Agnew, Riding Master Israel Kirk; one Regimental Sergeant-Major; one Trumpet-Major; two Troop Sergeant-Majors; eight Sergeants; seven Corporals; one Farrier; ninety Privates of the 2nd Dragoon Guards (Queen's Bays), who were either killed in action, died of their wounds or of disease or exposure during the campaigns of 1857, 1858 and 1859 in India; this tablet is erected by the officers of the regiment.

[Brigadier W. Campbell was for some time in command at Allahabad and had some fighting there. His career is a trifle dubious, but it would appear that he joined Outram at the Alum Bagh and assisted in its defence; and subsequently commanded at the operations round the Musa Bagh. I have not been able to discover where he died.]

For Majors Smith and Price, vide nos. 932 and 933. Captain Blair won the V.C. "for conspicuous gallantry when attacked by superior numbers" on the 28th September 1857. I have not been able to trace the other officers. They no doubt lost their lives in the small pacificatory expeditions that went on over Oudh and elsewhere till 1859.

The 2nd D. G.s were engaged only in Sir. C. Campbell's reduction of Lucknow and subsequent operations.]

968.—1863—OUTRAM, J., Lieut.-General Sir. Inscription:— In grateful memory of Lieut.-General Sir James Outram, Bart., G.C.B. This tablet is erected in this city of Lucknow to recall his valour and generosity in the memorable relief and siege and his far-seeing wisdom which recoiled this province to British rule; in this Christian Church, because by thoughtful kindness he gained the title of the Soldier's Friend and because in simplicity and sincerity he had his conversation in the world. Born 29th January 1803, died 12th March 1863. His body rests in Westminster Abbey."

[James Outram, second son of Benjamin Outram of Butterley Hall, Derbyshire, and his wife Margaret, daughter of Dr. James Anderson of Mounie, Co. Aberdeen, was educated at the Marischal College, Aberdeen, and entered the Indian Army in 1819 as an Ensign in the 23rd N.I. A keen sportsman, of whom it is said that he took 74 "first spears" out of 123 in a single year, and during a period of nine years was at the deaths of 191 tigers. From 1825 to 1838 he was employed in subjugating and civilizing the Bhils, the aboriginal tribes of Khandesh. He first attacked them and then enlisted his captives as soldiers; and for 12 years was turning these savages into peaceful and faithful citizens. He was Political Agent in Mahi Kanta, when the first Afghan war broke out, and joined Sir John Keane's staff, when he took the Bombay Army through Kandahar and Ghazni to Kabul. He was sent in pursuit of Dost Muhammad across the Hindu Kush in 1839 and took a prominent part in pacifying southern Afghanistan. He then became Political Agent in Lower Sind (1839) and in 1841 in Upper Sind. In 1842 his post was abolished on Sir Charles Napier's investiture with full diplomatic and military power in Sind; and it was on his departure that Sir Charles Napier, in proposing his health, called him "the Bayard of India, sans peur et sans reproche"—an epithet which will always remain linked to his name.

In 1843 he returned as Commissioner to carry out a treaty with the Amirs. The Amirs disliked the treaty as much as Outram did; the Residency at Haidarabad was attacked, but Outram defended it resolutely. Shortly after was fought the battle of Miani which gave us Sind. Outram was bitterly opposed to annexation, and even distributed his prize-money to charitable institutions on that ground. He was made a Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel and a C.B.

In 1844 he took leave; in 1845 he became Resident at Satara and in 1847 at Baroda. Here he exposed corruption in high places in a report which caused offence and the Bombay Government removed him; but in 1854 Lord Dalhousie sent him back to Baroda, thence to Aden and thence to Oudh as Resident. It fell to his lot to prepare a report on the existing state of the country. Even the defender of the Sind Amirs could not resist the clear evidence of misrule, and he supported annexation, which was carried out in 1856. In 1856-57 he was in command in Persia, but was summoned back to India and lost no time in reaching Calcutta (31st July 1857). He was made Commander of the Dinapore and Cawnpore divisions, and at once went up to take over the command. There was not, as is often stated, any supersession of Havelock who was merely a Brigadier-General in command of a field force. On the 15th September he arrived at Cawnpore and then joined Havelock, and published that famous order which proved his title to the name of "Bayard." In it he waived his rank, so as not to deprive Havelock of his command, and accompanied him as a military volunteer, and in his civil capacity as Chief Commissioner of Oudh. This order Sir Colin Campbell confirmed in terms as honorable to himself as to Outram and Havelock. It was a material as well as a sentimental sacrifice. Outram, already a G.C.B., could get no further reward than a permanent title and a pension; and this he believed he was, if not surrendering, at all events jeopardizing. He was also surrendering the General's substantial share of prize-money for that of a civilian volunteer. It was a magnificent act of self-sacrifice which has probably no parallel in history.

From this time till the relief Outram was a volunteer, riding in the charges of Barrow's volunteer cavalry and "whacking the fugitives" with a "Penang Lawyer." Even between two such men as Outram and Havelock the position was bound to have its difficulties: but they were overcome. Outram, after the relief, resumed his proper position and was in command at Lucknow during the Second Defence; and subsequently, after Sir Colin's relief, held the Alam Bagh with 4,000 men until the final capture in 1858 (a magnificent feat of arms, for which vide no. 935.) He was Military Member of the Supreme Council from 1853 to 1860, when he retired. He was made K.C.S.I., in 1861 and D.C.L., and a Baronet after the Mutiny (1858). His exploits and his great character have made him one of the most conspicuous heroes of Indian history. His character has been described as an embodiment of the old idea of the true and perfect knight, untainted by the influences which sapped mediæval chivalry. "It is impossible to conceive of any consideration that could have tempted Outram to stoop to a dirty action.....though there have been greater men in Anglo-Indian history there has never been one more loveable." As for his military qualities "a fox is a fool and a lion a coward by the side of Sir J. Outram" was the saying on the Bombay side in 1857.

Sir J. Outram married (1835) Margaret, daughter of James Anderson, J.P., of Brechin and had one son, Sir F. B. Outram, B.C.S., Under Secretary to the Government of the North-Western Provinces, 1858-1860, and wounded in the Mutiny; he is the present baronet.]

969.—1883—KAVANAGH, T. H., V.C. Inscription:—In honour of one whose name should never be forgotten, Thomas Henry Kavanagh, V.C., who, on the night of the 9th November 1857, with the devotion of an ancient Roman taking his life in his hand, went forth from the beleaguered Residency and, passing through a city thronged with merciless enemies, successfully guided Sir Colin Campbell and his army to the relief of the garrison.

[The son of a British soldier and a clerk in one of the Civil officers in Lucknow, his physical strength and iron nerve made him fitter for the sword than the pen. In the defence of Lucknow he did good service as Assistant Field Engineer in several sorties. The deed for which he won the V. C. was this. He offered his services to Colonel Napier to go out in disguise, and guide Sir Colin Campbell in his advance. Colonel Napier demurred; but Sir J. Outram, after refusing on the score of the danger, at last consented. He disguised himself as a badmash or swashbuckler with sword and shield, native made shoes, tight trousers, a silk kurtā, a tight fitting muslin shirt, turban and kumbarband; he also disguised his face with lamp-black. Outram himself daubed him once more, and he and Napier shaking his hand bade him God speed. He went out with the scout, Kanauji Lal, and reached the Gumti. They crossed it, and were stopped by a rebel officer. They satisfied him and proceeded on their way. They lost their way in the Dilkusha Park. They were put on the right track by two women in a village and later by a picket of sepoy. They were questioned by them and by another picket. They waded through a swamp, and passed unseen between two more pickets. Shortly after they were challenged by a British cavalry outpost. A Sikh officer in charge sent two troopers to guide Kavanagh to Sir Colin—"As I approached the door, an elderly gentleman with a stern face came out, and going up to him, I asked for Sir Colin Campbell. 'I am Sir Colin Campbell' was the sharp reply 'and who are you?' I pulled off my turban and opening the folds took out a short note of introduction from Sir James Outram." Kavanagh subsequently led the Army in its advance.

It was a splendid act of gallantry, and of the most invaluable service. Kavanagh received the V.O., being the first non-military man who ever obtained it (the next being Fraser McDonnell and Ross Mangles of the B.C.S.), a donation of Rs. 20,000, and the post of Assistant Commissioner. He rose to be a Deputy Commissioner. He wrote an account of his deed, entitled "How I won the Victoria Cross."

"Enter into the joy of thy Lord.

Matt. xxv, 21.

[J. W. Quinton, C.S.I., born 1834, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and joined the I. C. S. in the North-Western Provinces in 1856. He served as a junior officer chiefly in Ghazipur and Meerut; but most of his service in this province was in Oudh (1865-75), and chiefly in Lucknow as Deputy Commissioner. From 1875-77 he was Judicial Commissioner in Farnia. In 1878 he was Commissioner of Jhansi: and in 1883 fourth Member of the Legislative Council, Member of the Board of Revenue, North-Western Provinces (1885) and Public Service Commissioner (1886). In 1889 he became Chief Commissioner of Assam and in 1891 was sent to Manipur, a petty state on the confines of Assam, to put down the rebellion. The Residency was attacked, and when Mr. Quinton visited the fort to negotiate with them he and four other officers were treacherously murdered. Two columns were sent who speedily avenged the murder.]

- 971.—1893—JOHNSON, W. T., Major. Inscription:—In loving memory of William Thomas Johnson, Major, H. M.'s Indian Army. He volunteered for service in the Crimea and was attached to H. M.'s XXth Foot. Took part in the battles of Alma, Balaklava, and Inkerman, and in the trenches before Sebastopol. Served with the 1st Scinde Horse through the Persian Campaign, and commanded a squadron of the XIth Irregulars, the only Native Cavalry at the first relief of Lucknow. At the action of the Alam Bagh he gallantly charged and took one of the enemy's guns; and went out with led horses from the Residency to bring in the wounded. He died at Seaford, Sussex, May 31, 1893, aged 66."

[Major W. T. Johnson is one of the forgotten heroes of the Mutiny. He was with the detachment under Major Vincent Eyre and took part in the action of Kundun Patti, and joined Eyre just before the action, having been 24 hours in the saddle. In the battle of the Alum Bagh one gun persisted in "bowling nine-pounders" down the road, after the rebels had been driven back. Captain Johnson charged it with 25 troopers and sabred the gunners. He was forced to abandon it, as he was under fire: but the enemy did not dare to serve it again. During the night after the relief Johnson and Dr. Greenhow and half a troop of his cavalry went out in search of the wounded. They found a number who were brought in on the horses led by Johnson's troopers.]

- 972.—1902—CAPPER, W. C., B.C.S. Inscription:—To the glory of God and in memory of William Copeland Capper, Bengal

Civil Service; second son of Samuel James Capper, of Snarebrook, in the county of Essex. As one of Anderson's Garrison he served through the defence of the Residency, and, after filling many posts in the Government of this Province, retired therefrom as Judicial Commissioner. Died at Eastbourne, Sussex, July 8th, 1902, aged 70.

[W. C. Capper was educated at Haileybury, and joined the B.C.S., in 1852 and was attached to the Punjab. In 1856 he was transferred to the Oudh Commission and was the first Deputy Commissioner of Mallawan (Hardoi). He was there when the Mutiny broke out and remained there till the 8th June by which time the troops had shown unmistakable signs of mutiny. He rode into Lucknow and served throughout the defence, in which he was wounded. After the relief he was made a Special Commissioner in Farrukhabad and then took leave. On his return in 1859 he served as Deputy Commissioner at Rae Bareilly, Dariabad, Lucknow (1861) and with brief periods of officiating as Commissioner and of leave, remained there till 1868. He then became Commissioner of the Rae Bareilly Division (1868-1870) and then, after leave, Commissioner of Fyzabad (1873) and Judicial Commissioner from 1877 and retired in 1882.]

- 973.—1858—MACDONNELL, F. J., Lieutenant. Inscription :—Sacred to the memory of Lieutenant F. J. MacDonnell, Adjutant of 2nd Punjab Cavalry, who was killed in action at Courci, near Lucknow, on 23rd March 1858, æt 23, while gallantly charging at the head of his men ; beloved and respected by all who knew him. This stone has been erected over his mortal remains by the officers and men of his regiment to mark their grief for his early death and to record their lasting sense of his many good qualities as a soldier and a man.

- 974.—1857-58—MEN OF THE 3RD COMPANY, 8TH BATTALION, R.A. Inscription :—In memory of the soldiers of no. 3 Company 8th Battalion, Royal Artillery, who were killed or died in India during the campaigns of 1857-58. They are 48 in number.

Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori.

[It is very difficult to distinguish one company or battalion of R.A. from another in the records. This particular company however was with Havelock in his advance and at all his battles ; and subsequently also in the capture of Lucknow. With Havelock it was commanded by Maude, one of the four most famous artillery officers of the Mutiny, the other three being Tombs, Blunt and Olpherts. If it remained continuously under Maude, it was also in Outram's Alun Bagh operations.]

Turner, of the 73rd Perthshire Regiment, who were killed by a landslip at Naini Tal on the 18th September 1880, while employed with a working party endeavouring to rescue some of their fellow-creatures. This tablet is erected by the officers of the regiment as a tribute to their heroism and devotion to duty.

- 976.—1857—VICTIMS OF AURANGABAD MASSACRE. Inscription :—To the Glory of God and in memory of those honoured ones who fell on this spot, the 5th of June, in the year of Our Lord 1857. James Grant Thomason; Charles John Jenkins; Henry Wilder Lambie Sneyd; Cornelius Lysaght; Mrs. Lysaght; Mordaunt Money Salmon; Alexander Key; Mary Key; Colin Alexander Robertson; Charles Frederick Scott; Mrs. Scott; Miss Scott; William Wilberforce Pitt; George William Rutherford; Thomas John Hope Spens; Ensign Johnson; Ensign E. C. Scott; Quartermaster-Sergeant Grant; Mrs. Bowling and child; Mrs. Grant; Lieutenant Sheils; Mrs. Sheils; Mr. Pereira and four children; Mr. Hurst; Mr. Smith; Drummer-boy August Schlottauer.

[It has already been described (no. 410) how Mr. Jenkins and a party of the Shahjahanpur fugitives escaped to Pawayan. Thence they made their way to Muhamdi, then headquarters of a district corresponding to Kheri. Mr. Thomason, a son of Mr. James Thomason, was Deputy Commissioner, and Captain P. Orr (no. 908), his assistant. Trouble there had been anticipated since May 1857 on the arrival of the Shahjahanpur fugitives: but the troops showed symptoms of mutiny and it was decided to retire to Sitapur. An escort was sent thence for them. This belonged to the 41st. They showed undoubted signs of mutiny, but Mr. Thomason made them swear on Lachman, a jamadar, doubtless a Brahman, to be faithful. The party left Muhamdi on the 5th for Aurangabad; but close to that place the massacre began. Lieutenant Sheil, a pensioner, was first shot down by a sepoy. They then shot down the whole party. The poor ladies all joined in prayer, coolly and undauntedly awaiting their fate. Lysaght was killed as he knelt down in the open: the wounded and the children were "butchered in the most cruel way." Captain Orr was spared because of the intervention of the Muhamdi troops—the 9th Oudh Irregulars—a regiment which he had raised and commanded.]

Of these victims all but Mr. Thomason, Mr. and Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Hurst belonged to Shahjahanpur. Mr. Smith and Hurst were clerks of Mr. Thomason's. All the officers belonged to the 28th N. I. The tomb is looked after by S. Tasaddug Husain, Honorary Magistrate of Aurangabad. For Mr. Thomason see no. 953. C. J. Jenkins was at Haileybury and came to India in 1861.]

- 978.—1858—HOPE, A., Brigadier, the Hon'ble. Inscription :—Brigadier the Hon'ble Adrian Hope, C.B., Lieutenant-Colonel, 93rd Royal Highlanders. Born 3rd March 1821. Killed at Ruiya, 15th April 1858.

[Adrian Hope (1821-1858) was the ninth son of General Sir John Hope, the famous Peninsular veteran, who was created first Lord Niddry, and subsequently succeeded to the Earldom of Hopetoun as fourth Earl. He was of a family that goes back to Sir James Hope (1641) the great Scotch mineralogist, and to the Hopes of Craig Hall (a still older family, of no. 628). To this family Sir Theodore Craicoff Hope, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., and many famous soldiers and sailors have belonged, whilst the first Marquis of Linlithgow, who was Governor General of the Australian Commonwealth, was the 7th Earl. Adrian Hope was Colonel of the 93rd Highlanders, and as Brigadier did excellent service in the Second Relief of Lucknow, at Cawnpore and again at the siege of Lucknow. One of the best loved officers in the army, idolized by his men, he was sacrificed to a blunder. After the siege of Lucknow, Walpole (much to everybody's surprise—nobody thought Sir Colin would entrust his favourite Highlanders to him) was given a column to advance into Rohilkhand. Ruiya, the jungle fort of Nirpat Singh, was held in force and it was decided to attack it. The place was not reconnoitred and was found to be much stronger than was expected; and the assailants were driven back with heavy loss, including Lieutenants Douglas and Bramley of the 42nd (spelt Bramly on the memorial at Bareilly, no. 406), and Lieutenant Willoughby. Hope was shot dead from a high tree inside the fort, as it was supposed, by a European renegade (cf. no. 399). According to Forbes-Mitchell this would be the same man who murdered Lieutenant Tucker. "A true soldier, a kind, courteous, noble gentleman, in word and deed, devoted to his profession, beloved by his men, adored by his friends" is W. H. Russell's description of Adrian Hope.]

979.—1858—(1) HOPE, A., Brigadier the Hon'ble., (2) DOUGLAS, C., (3) WILLOUGHBY, H., (4) HARRINGTON, Lieutenants. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Brigadier the Hon'ble Adrian Hope, Lieutenant Charles Douglas, 42nd Royal Highlanders, Lieutenant H. Willoughby, 4th Punjab Infantry, Lieutenant Harrington, Royal Artillery. Who fell at Fort Ruiya on the 15th April 1858.

[For the facts leading to the death of these officers see no. 978. H. Willoughby is an error: it should be Edward Cotgrave Parr Willoughby. He was the son of Major-General M. W. Willoughby, Bombay Artillery, and Louisa Frances, his wife, daughter of Robert Anderson, born at Poona in 1834. A brother of his, Lieutenant-General M. W. Willoughby, C.S.I., served in Persia and Abyssinia, and was Military Secretary to the Bombay Government. All these officers, with their men, were buried in the same grave, in a tope of trees at Rudamau, close to Madhoganj, and 3 miles from Ruiya Fort. There seems a probability, therefore, that General Hope's tomb is a cenotaph. There are two other graves, which belong to Wazir Singh, a Christian zamindar of Rudamau, and his wife. Wazir Singh was Mr. Edwards' orderly and remained with him whilst he was at Khasaura. Cf. no. 980. The name of Lieutenant Bramley is not, as it should be, on this inscription.]

980.—1857—(1) PROBYN, E. M., (2) PROBYN, L. D. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of Elliot Markillof, born 25th March 1857, died 25 July 1857; and of Letitia Domina, born 7th February 1856, died 12th August 1857, the beloved children of William George Probyn, Esq., C.S.

Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not; for of such is the Kingdom of God.

Luke xviii, 16.

[William George Probyn came to India in 1847 and retired as Judge of Saharanpur in 1877. He died in 1911. During the Mutiny, he was Collector of Fatehgarh (cf. no. 885) and entrusted himself and his family to Hardeo Baksh of Katiari when he left Fatehgarh. Hardeo Baksh and Keshri Singh protected them, as well as Mr. R. M. Edwards, Collector of Budaun, from June to September at Khasaura and Rampura (which Mr. Edwards calls Ranjpura). Their troubles and sufferings were terrible and are fully described in Mr. Edwards' account. They were moved from Khasaura to Rampura and then back again. The boy was taken ill at Rampura, and died on arriving at Khasaura, according to Edwards, on the night of the 26th-27th July. He was buried under some trees, the only dry spot that could be found. The girl was also taken ill at Rampura and died on the 21st August, according to Edwards. She was buried by her brother. The rest escaped at length to Cawnpore.

Hardeo Bakhsh was given the title of Raja and the K.C.S.I. The Probyns were sheltered in a farmyard belonging to Thakur Keshri Singh, his uncle.]

- 981.—1857—ROBERTSON, A., Major. Inscription:—The grave of Alexander Robertson, Brevet-Major of the Bengal Artillery, and Gun Carriage Agent, Fatehgarh, who died of wounds inflicted by the insurgent mutineers on the 17th September 1857. His memory lives in the hearts of his brother officers and friends, a few of whom have erected this tomb.

[For the Fatehgarh massacre, vide no. 385. Major Robertson was in one of the three boats that escaped : it grounded at Singirampur, and could not be got off again. What followed was the Cawnpore massacre on a smaller scale. Only three people escaped, Major Robertson, Mr. Jones and Mr. Churcher, the first two badly wounded. Major Robertson, assisted by Mr. Churcher, escaped ashore and the two were sheltered in Kulhaur by some herdsmen. Thence he might have escaped with Edwards and the Probyns (see above entry) who were in communication with him : but he was either unable or dissuaded from doing so, and died, watched over by Mr. Churcher, who might have escaped, to the last. Mr. Churcher in the end escaped to Cawnpore. A. Robertson was the son of G. Robertson, of Edinburgh, born in 1820.]

- 982.—1837—ORR, J. Inscription:—Sacred to the memory of James Orr, Esquire, who departed this life, the 15th September 1832, aged 80 years.

[On the road between Tanda and Mubarakpur, about $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Tanda. Mr. Orr was a Paymaster in the British Service and introduced great reforms in the manufacture of cotton fabrics at Tanda. From the latter end of the 18th century Europeans had had factories for cotton bleaching at Tanda. Mr. Orr was one of these, and imported English patterns, improving the art of printing and introducing beautiful designs. He built a large house at Tanda.]

- 983.—1837—RAVENSCROFT, G. Inscription:—In memory of George Ravenscroft, B.C.S., who was brutally attacked by a gang of robbers on the night of the 6th and died on the 7th May 1837.

Restored by the Raja of Bhinga, June 1837.

[Mr. G. Ravenscroft born in 1777 and educated at Christ Church, Oxford, came to India in 1797 and served almost entirely in Bengal. He was Collector of Cawnpore for 5 years (1813—1816 and 1818 to 1820). He rendered himself notorious by entering largely into rash speculations and when it became necessary to fulfil obligations, he did not hesitate to appropriate large sums, amounting to nearly 2½ lakhs out of the Government Treasury for the purpose.

He fled into Oudh when the defalcations were discovered and lived for 9 months near Fyzabad. When discovered, he fled to the Raja of Bhinga, who concealed his presence. He gave him land to cultivate and a house. When Mr. Ravenscroft began to plant indigo, the Raja's eldest son became alarmed and hired some dacoits to kill him. An Ensign Platt, from Secrora, was staying with him at the time. In the night the dacoits, some 60 in number, attacked the house with spears: they wounded Ravenscroft, who died next day (7th May 1823). Platt though himself wounded, managed to save Mrs. Ravenscroft and the child.

There is extant a letter by him written to the Board of Commissioners on the 1st January 1810. (Selections from the Revenue Records of the N. W. P. 1818—1820, p. 264.) The date on the tomb is wrong. It should be the night of the 6th-7th May 1823. It is probably a mere sculptor's error, induced by the following date.]

- 984.—1736.—D'ESSA, BIBI ANNA.—Inscription :—Aqui jaso Bibi Anna D'Essa bizneta de Mirza Gulcaren faleceo em Dilli aos 2 de Marco de 1736.

[This and the next three tombs, with two others that have no inscriptions, are those referred to in Note E on page 81 as first discovered by Dr. Christison. They are still in existence.]

Father Hosten suggests that this is the great-granddaughter (bizneta) of Mirza Zu'l Qarnin, referred to at the bottom of page 28 and elsewhere. The name D'Essa is also written Dessa, De Sa and D'Esa. Bibiana is a "very Portuguese" name, but the words can also be read as Bibi Anna, with an obvious meaning.]

- 985.—1736.—DE SAIA (?), D. C.—Inscription :—Aqui jais Domingos Cardozo De Saia [fa] leceo em Agra a 22 de Julho de 173 [6?].
[De Saia is probably also D'Essa in another form.]

- 986.—1761.—CARDOZO, S.—Inscription :— - - - siao Cardoz [o] [o] biit em Bhart [p]ur por nome Urtucuer Knan (?) 2 de [D]ezembro 1761.

[This inscription is much mutilated. M. Ismael Garcias of Goa, whom Father Hosten got to read this and the other inscriptions for me, conjectures that the first five letters represent Sebastiao, or a part of it. "Por nome" is "by name" or "alias"; and "Urtucuer Knan" he conjectures to represent some Muhammadan name or title—"Knan" being "Khan." Such double names are common.]

- 987.—1761.—DA CRUZ, R.—Inscription :—Aqui faleceo Rita (?) em Bharatpur filha de Alde(o)dre da Cruz aos 10 de Dezembro de 1761 annos...

[Alde(o)dre probably is Aldecandre or Alexander.]

Father Hosten conjectures that possibly D'Essa's, Cardozo's, and Da Cruz's were all connected, and that this was a family cemetery.]

- 988.—1857.—SAVADA KOTHI.—Inscription :—In memoriam Savada Koti, 1857.

- 989.—1857.—WELL IN WHEELER'S ENTRENCHMENT.—Inscription :—This well supplied the only water available during the siege.

[This is the well associated with John Mackillop's name.]

My attention was drawn to these inscriptions by the late Mr. O. E. Crawford, C.S. He made a remark on that occasion which is worthy of reproduction. He pointed out that in all the public inscriptions which commemorate the events of the Cawnpore massacre there are only two words too many. Their keynote is extreme simplicity—a mere description of what occurred with no redundant panegyric and no unnecessary adjectives, a mark of the highest taste; for as Mr. Crawford said "the facts speak for themselves and supply the adjectives." This acute criticism was characteristic of Mr. Crawford's own high taste.
